Gone Before.

It singeth low in every heart
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not
However we may call.

They throng the silence of the breast,
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

'Tis hard to take the burden up,
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joy of life,
They softened every frown.

But, oh, 'tis good to think of them,
When we are tempted sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more!

More home-like seems the vast unknown,
Since they have entered there,
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare.

They cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, Thy love abides,
Our God, forevermore.

THE OLD THANKSGIVIN'.

A KANSAS FARMER DREAMS OF NEW ENGLAND JOYS.

Ezra had written a letter to the home folks, and in it he had complained that never before had he spent such a weary, lonesome day as this Thanksgiving Day had been. Having finished this letter, he sat for a long time gazing idly into the open fire that snapped cinders all over the hearthstone and sent its red forks dancing up the chimney to join the winds that frolicked and gamboled across the Kansas prairie that raw November night. It had rained hard all day and was cold, and, although the open fire made every honest effort to be cheerful, Ezra, as he sat in front of it in the wooden rocker and looking down into the glowing embers, experienced a dreadful feeling of loneliness and homesickness.

"I'm sick o' Kansas," said Ezra to himself. "Here I've been in this plaguey country for goin' on a year, and—yes, I'm sick of it, powerful sick of it. What a miser'ble Thanksgivin' this has been! They don't know what Thanksgivin' is out this way. I wish I was back in ol' Massachusetts—that's the country for me, and they hev the kind o' Thanksgivin' I like!"

Musing in this strain, while the rain went patter-patter on the window-panes, Ezra saw a strange sight in the fire-place—yes, right among the embers and the crackling flames Ezra saw a strange, beautiful picture unfold and spread itself out like a panorama.

"How very wonderful!" murmured the young man. Yet he did not take his eyes away, for the picture soothed him, and he loved to look upon it.

"It is a picture of long ago," said Ezra, softly. "I had like to forget it, but now it comes back to me as nat'ral like an ol' friend. And I seem to be a part of it, an' the feelin' o' that time comes back with the picter, too."

Ezra did not stir, his head rested upon his hand, and his eyes resting upon the shadows in the firelight.

"It is a picter of the ol' home," said Ezra to himself. "I am back there in Belchertown with the Holyoke hills up north an' the Berkshire mountains a loomin' up gray an' misty-like in the Western horizon. Seems as if it wuz early mornin'; everything is still, and it is so cold when we boys crawl out o' bed, that, if it wuzn't Thanksgivin' mornin' we'd crawl back again an' wait for mother to call us. But it is Thanksgiving mornin', an' we're going skatin' down on the pond. The squealin' o' the pigs has told us it is five o'clock, and we must hurry: we're goin' to call by for the Dickinson boys an' Hiram Peabody, an' we've got to hyper! Brother Amos gets on 'bout half o' my clo'es and I get on 'bout half o' his, but it's all the same, they are stout, warm clo'es, and they're big enough to fit any of us boys—mother looked out for that when she made 'em. When we go down stairs we find the girls there, all bundled up nice an' warm—Mary an' Helen an' Cousin Irene. They're goin' with us, an' we all start on tiptoe and quiet like so's not to wake up the ol' folks. The ground is frozen hard; we stub our toes on the frozen ruts in the road. When we come to the minister's house, Laura is standin' on the front stoop a-waitin' for us. Laura is the minister's daughter. She's a friend o' Sister Helen's—pretty as a dagarr'otype, an, gentle-like and tender. Laura lets me carry her skates, and I'm glad of it, although I have my hands full already with the lantern, the hockies and the rest. Hiram Peabody keeps us waitin', for he has overslept himself, an' when he comes trottin' out at last the girls make fun of him—all except Sister Mary, an' she sort o' sticks up for Hiram, an' we're all so cute we kind o' calc'late we know the reason why

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 7, 1887.

MASSACHUSETTS to George D. Robinson: "Well done, good and faithful servant."

IF the remarkable unanimity which prevailed at the state house during the opening hours of the Legislature, Wednesday, would only continue, our law-makers could finish up their work at an early date and get home in season for the spring planting.

AN interesting experiment in profit-sharing is to be tried this year by the Boston Herald, which will divide a share of the profits with its employes, after reserving a fair rate of interest on the capital. It will also establish a benefit society if the employes wish, contributing toward it as much as all the men.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS did not stand by its own candidates for the presidency of the Senate and the speakership of the House, and they accordingly got left. One thing is evident—Boston may not have many Republican voters, but she has plenty of candidates to absorb the votes cast by other parts of the state.

SPRINGFIELD is happy, and Rockwell winks with pleasure. The president has signed the bill appropriating $150,000 for a public building there, and already an animated discussion is under way as to where it shall be located. Leave it to Ducker. The tournament is a national institution already, and the bike boys will want a floor or two in the new building.

THERE are seventy-five toboggan clubs in the vicinity of New York. The toboggans in general use are made of slats of rock-maple, kiln-dried and highly finished. Three of the slats are slightly thicker than the others, and are provided with a steel shoe, which are fastened by flanges which are turned into the wood in such a way that no bolts, screws or rivets are used anywhere along the bearing surface.

GOVERNOR ROBINSON signalized the close of his administration Wednesday evening by consummating the sale of the Hoosac Tunnel, and the 44 miles of railroad owned by the state, to the Fitchburg road. The act authorizing the sale was passed in June, 1885, and since then the governor and council have been laboring patiently to effect the desired end. The commonwealth is to receive $5,000,000 in fifty-year bonds, bearing three per cent interest for five years, 3½ per cent for five years, and 4 per cent thereafter; also $5,000,000 in common stock of the road. The balance of the stock is to be made preferred, and will be entitled to 4 per cent dividends, any surplus of earnings to be divided pro rata between the state's common stock and the preferred. The transaction is one of the most important the state has figured in for many years. It is a good one for the Fitchburg road, which gets for $10,000,000 that which has cost the state $25,000,000. But though the price is very low, it is no less a good thing for the commonwealth, for it takes the state out of the railroad business for good, and the big bore will no longer be a leech on the public treasury. The people of Massachusetts will surely rejoice that the state is well rid of the tunnel, and Gov. Robinson is to be congratulated upon having carried the trade through so successfully. The Fitchburg road has also bought the Troy and Boston road, so that it now has a through line from Boston to the Hudson river at Troy.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

The inaugural of Gov. Ames has one admirable feature which is usually missing in state papers of this description,—it is short and to the point. He says what he has to say in a few words, and then stops. In this respect the message is a model, which others might follow with profit.

The governor plunges at once into the financial affairs of the state, and in view of the tendency of recent legislatures not to raise enough money by taxation for the needs of the government, he recommends a state tax of $2,000,000. He alludes briefly to the sale of the Hoosac Tunnel, and promises a special communication on the subject later. In view of the increasing difficulties experienced by savings banks in investing their deposits profitably, he recommends that the limitation of loans upon personal securities be increased from 33⅓ to 40 per cent of the total deposits. He speaks a good word for the coöperative banks, for the state board of arbitration, and the civil service act. Additional safeguards against the issue of fraudulent stock certificates are recommended; and to aid in the suppression of intemperance he recommends greater restriction in the number of licenses and a large increase in the fees. He urges a revision of the Sunday laws, many of which are incompatible with the present state of society. Of woman suffrage he says, "I earnestly recommend, as an act of simple justice, the enactment of a law securing municipal suffrage to women." The agricultural college and experimental station are recommended to the judicious liberality of the Legislature. The governor says that more towns would join in district superintendence of their schools if the means were provided, and thinks this should be done by the state. He advocates the extension of industrial education, and suggests the establishment of high schools of the mechanic arts and of industrial design in the cities and larger towns, and the introduction of manual training in the grammar schools. To relieve the overworked justices of the supreme court he renews the recommendation that jurisdiction of divorce cases be transferred to the superior court, and suggests that the number of judges of the latter court may be increased as needed. He recommends a modification of the trustee process, and also some action which shall enable the small debtor, as well as the large one, to free himself from debt and start anew. In closing, the governor says: "The people have bestowed on us their confidence and entrusted us for the time being with their political power. Let us so exercise that power as to deserve their confidence. It will be my pleasure to second all your efforts to this end, and I trust that we may so perform our respective duties that neither the illustrious name nor the material welfare of our ancient and beloved commonwealth shall suffer at our hands."

Turner was standing on the ground between the cars when the balance of the train backed down upon one track, striking the car being loaded and shifting it from its position. As it moved the platform between the two was twisted around, and Turner's head was caught between it and the side of the car, his lower jaw being crushed off. He was taken to the hospital at Springfield, but died from the effects of his wound on Sunday.

Morton*; Holyoke—S.T. Miller and E. E. Kingsbury*; Westfield—Timothy M. Cooley* and George L. Minor; Palmer—Herbert A. Northrop*; Ludlow—Lemuel D. Waite; Tolland—George W. Granger*; Chester—Edwin L. Alvord*; Blandford—Albert H. Nye.

Mr. Northrop's re-appointment in this town has been expected, and is agreeable to all parties, but it is generally felt that there should be two deputies here, and the sheriff has disappointed the prevailing desire of this community in failing to re-appoint Deputy Sheriff Palmer. This result had been anticipated, but it is none the less disappointing to see so efficient and faithful an officer dropped.

STRIKE AT THE WIRE MILL.

Last Saturday some of the tinners and wire drawers at the mill of the Palmer Wire M'f'g. Co. were told that Monday they would change from "day work" to "piece work." Superintendent Johnson was not at the mill when it started Monday morning, but sent word that he would be up before noon and arrange a satisfactory schedule of prices. The men refused to go to work however, until they knew just what they were to recieve. In the meantime the balance of the works, including some men who had been working on "piece work" for months, was shut down, the proprietors not caring to run some of the departments ahead of others. About ten o'clock Superintendent Johnson arrived at the mill, and his schedule proved entirely satisfoctory to all but four men, these refusing to go to work, the others being anxious to do so. The mill could have been easily operated without these four, but the owners would not run it for the reason before given. Monday night the four called on Mr. Johnson, lessening their demands somewhat, but still asking more than the company's offer. Tuesday they were notified that they would be no longer wanted, and to call and get their pay. Then they made a still further concession, but were told they were not wanted. Other men have been sent for, and the mill will start again next Monday. The proprietors are in no hurry, having no large orders on hand, but do not wish to keep idle such of their help as want to work.

The cause of the murmur against the new schedule is—so the workmen claim—that they cannot make as much as by the old method, having formerly received $2 per day. On the other hand the superintendent, an experienced hand at the business, says it is certain that on piece work the men can earn 25 cents per day more. Men who were changed from day to piece work some time ago are making more than formerly, and do not care to change back. As these four are the only dissatisfied ones, their places will be easily filled from outside.

At 8 o'clock the company filed into Mr. Gates' house, he being absent at his place of business, and patiently waited for his coming. He came, he saw, he was, to speak very mildly, exceedingly surprised, but had strength enough left to shake hands with all present. Mrs. Gates had been informed that company might be expected that night, so was in a measure prepared, but as subsequent events proved she, too, was somewhat surprised. The family of six, father, mother and four children, being seated side by side, Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham made a few remarks in his usual felicitous and happy manner, and at the conclusion presented Mr. and Mrs. Gates in behalf of those present, with a very beautiful marble-top black walnut chamber set and a fine silver water pitcher. Rev. G. W. Mansfield, pastor of the Memorial M. E. church, received a Christmas letter last Saturday from Bishop H. W. Warren of Denver, Col., and read it Sunday morning in church. The letter congratulated the pastor and church on their faithfulness in having taken all the collections asked for by the general conference. Among other things the bishop says: "You do not select certain agreeable duties to do and omit the unpleasant. You belong to the whole of Methodism. We will bring Springfield district up from its grade of 290 in benevolences nearer to its grade in pastoral support, which is 194. The district pays 52 cents per member for these benevolencies, but your church one dollar. This church, with no person of wealth in it, paid into the treasury of the parent missionary society last year $273, or more than one-tenth of the $5570 which the 60 societies of the district paid. The sum paid to each of the other benevolences of the church exceeded the sum apportioned to it. This very desirable result is doubtless due very largely to the fact that the people are educated with respect to the vital interests of the church. When the people know the facts they feel their force and respond to them."

DEATH ON THE RAIL.

A terrible accident, the worst in the history of the road, occurred on the Boston and Albany railroad at Mittineague, 2½ miles west of Springfield, Tuesday morning. The modoc from the west, an hour late, had just rounded the curve west of the station, a few minutes after 6 o'clock, when a journal on the tender broke, about 200 yards above the station, throwing the baggage, smoking car and coaches on the side track, where they dashed into some freight cars, the force of the collision causing the baggage car to rebound and hurling it back across the down track against the engine of the local freight, which had just stopped at the station on the up track. The locomotive was tipped over and completely wrecked, as was the baggage car, smoker and passenger coaches, besides some of the freight cars. The wreck took fire at once, and almost in a moment the flames had spread through the entire mass of ruins. The passenger engine and express car did not leave the rails; the three following cars were burned, and the two sleepers escaped unharmed, although the forward one was somewhat burned. One passenger, name unknown, was burned to a crisp, and eighteen others were more or less injured, none of them fatally. In the baggage car was the body of Andrew Jenks, which was on the way to Ludlow for burial, and was badly burned. His widow and daughter were among the injured. There were only seven passengers in the smoker and twenty in the passenger coach, but it was almost a miracle that more were not killed or burned, as several were caught in the wreck, and the flames spread with terrible rapidity, but the villagers and train hands came promptly to the rescue and worked with a will. Nearly all the baggage and a large amount of mail matter was burned. An examination of the track shows that a rear wheel on the tender dropped on the ties inside the rail about four miles west of the disaster, and ploughed along until it struck the switch guard rail near the station, the blow breaking a journal on the other side of the truck and throwing it entirely from the track. It was afternoon before trains could pass, but the wreck was practically all cleared away by night. The accident will probably cost the road about $75,000, the loss on rolling stock being placed at $40,000.

An accident more horrible than the above occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio road at 4 o'clock Tuesday morning, about seven miles east of Tiffin, O. An east-bound freight train was seeking to make a siding at the village of Republic, but the fireman could not keep up steam, owing to the intense cold, and got stalled when near there. The west-bound fast express was due, and the freight conductor had just started to signal it when it came dashing around a curve at the rate of 60 miles an hour. With a terrible crash the trains came together, the engines being completely demolished. The smoking car was telescoped, the wreck took fire, and seventeen people were killed or burned to death. The passengers in the sleepers escaped without injury.

EVEN Harper's Weekly gags at some of the "reform" practices of Mr. Cleveland. Reviewing a list of competent officers who have been removed to make room for Democratic politicians, it says:

The opinion is universal, so far as we have seen, that these officers were all singularly competent, and in no sense offensive partisans. We regret sincerely the discredit which such changes necessarily cast upon the executive. If they are deemed necessary to secure party support, the same necessity might be pleaded with equal force for disregard of reform in all suspensions and removals.

ONE thing is certain—when cars can be heated comfortably and safely by steam, as is done to-day on some railroads, it ought to be made a crime for a road to retain the present death-trap system of warming by stoves. It is a tempting of Providence for which there is neither necessity nor excuse.

THE Gloucester fishing record for the past year is a sad one, 26 vessels, valued at $152,300, having been lost, while the number of lives lost was 137, leaving 14 women widows and 36 children fatherless.

ONE of the strange things in this world of ours is the remarkable way in which churches oftentimes stand by a minister who is charged with immorality. In one sense this is as it should be, for a clergyman's high calling should shield him from too ready acceptance of idle slander. But it should not blind people to palpable sin. Here for instance is the case of Rev. C. L. Goodell, a Methodist minister in Providence. Charged with adultry, a church committee unanimously pronounce him innocent, while the next day the supreme court grants Theodore Foster a divorce from his wife on account of her adultry with this same minister, the evidence being very conclusive! And yet the church affirms its belief in his innocence! When the courts pronounce a man guilty of crime, and a church upholds him as a teacher of purity and religion, what must the world think? and what is the influence of that church in the world? Such blind infatuation is deplorable. Well did the Savior say, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

The naked and terribly mutilated body of George A. Codman, a Somerville milkman, was found scattered along the Lexington highway Wednesday, and Edward Nowlan, a boy of 17, who worked for him, has been arrested and confessed the crime, the object of the murder being to obtain his victim's money.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, JAN. 5th, 1886.

The day before yesterday the Andover trial was concluded at the United States hotel. Public interest in it was sustained to the very last, and the crowd at the closing day was much larger than at any previous time. On that day the other professors, besides Prof. Smyth, were heard. They were Profs. Tucker, Harris, Hincks and Churchill. It was said at the time Prof. Smyth's trial was in progress that he was really the author of but little that was objected to in the Andover Review and in "Progressive Orthodoxy," though he was willing, in his defense, to bear the responsibility for it all. But when Profs. Tucker, Harris and Hincks had finished their papers, there could have been no doubt where the aggressive part of the new theology came from. They carried the war into Africa, and though more temper was shown, especially by one of them, than had been manifested before during the trial, yet they were bold and uncompromising and stood fearlessly to their ground. Of course it does not follow that they were right because they were aggressive, but their attitude was not that of men on their defense, but earnest proclaimers of new ideas.

It will probably be a long time before a decision in the case is reached by the visitors, for there is a vast amount of evidence to go through, and many long legal arguments to consider. All of this matter will appear in print very soon. Prof. Smyth's reply has already been issued in pamphlet form by Cupples, Upham & Co., and I suppose that Mifflin & Co. will issue a volume with the full report of the trial as soon as possible. Stenographic notes were taken where written documents were not followed and the record is complete. While no one may predict confidentially what the verdict of the visitors will be, yet from hearing all that was said at the trial, it seems to me that the best results for the denomination, for the seminary and for the cause of truth itself, will be reached by continuing the professors in their places. Each side is perfectly conscientious and each has a strong case, if once its point of view is granted. On each side the contestants are equally devoted to the truth. But the truth will triumph whatever be the decision. If the professors are wrong, their doctrines will not have vitality. If they are right and their opponents wrong, then they ought to be allowed to go on, for no one will argue for a moment that the founders of the Andover creed would wish their seminary to be made a perpetual brooding-place for error. It is likely that the difficulty will be bad, temporarily, for the Congregational denomination, but, as the doctrines most in dispute are not the essentials (for on those all parties are agreed) it would seem best to tolerate much in unessentials rather than to risk the integrity of the denomination.

Just now there is a notable dramatic and musical season in progress. The National Opera company, under Theodore Thomas, is at the Boston theater, with distinguished singers and a powerful operatic combination. To-night is Victor Masset's "Galatea," with ballet, to-morrow is "Orpheus and Eurydice;" Friday, "Lohengrin;" Saturday afternoon, "Faust," and in the evening, "Jeannette and Sylovia." Next Monday will be "Aida," Tuesday, "Flying Dutchman;" Wednesday, "Lakme;" Thursday, "Lohengrin," and Friday, "Martha." Modjeska is at the Hollis street theater; Miss Fortescue, apparently one of the rising dramatic geniuses, is at the Park; "Held by the Enemy," a drama of our civil war, is at the Museum. On Sunday evening Kate Field will lecture at the Boston theater on the Mormons.

To-day the Legislature has been organized in a very quiet way. Last evening the Republican caucus for the president of the senate resulted in an easy victory for Mr. Boardman. He had 14 votes to 8 for Forbes, 2 for Phillips and 1 for Milliken. Mr. Forbes was disappointed in two men who were supposed to be all right for him, and if they had gone for him, instead of Boardman, it would have reduced the latter below a majority and on the second ballot Forbes would have had three Phillips votes (Milliken's being cast by Phillips) and so would have had the 13 necessary to nominate. But there is no ill feeling over the result. The surprise of the day has been Taft's small vote in the caucus this morning,—Noyes 81, Darling 30, Taft 24, Parkman 8 and Wharton 3. Springfield and some other western places did not support Taft as was expected, but his greatest loss is said to have come from Worcester county. He counted it solid for him, with very few exceptions. The story here is that Judge Thayer said that Mr. Noyes could not have any votes in Worcester county and worked for Mr. Taft; then that Mr. Theodore C. Bates, hearing of Thayer's remark and being already well disposed to Noyes, set to work in the latter's interests and carried over to him some dozen or more who were supposed to be sure for Taft. At any rate, Taft fell far below what was expected and was first to move in the caucus to make Noyes' nomination unanimous.

The Democrats held a conference this forenoon, and voted to support the Republican nominations of Capt. Adams for sergeant-at-arms and Edward A. McLaughlin for clerk of the house. Every officer elected to-day has had a unanimous vote, president, speaker, clerks and so on, except one for another man for chaplain of the senate.

When Gov. Robinson took leave of the house to-day, after administering the oath of office to the members, he was applauded vigorously by all, showing apparently the high esteem in which he is held by the representative men of the state. Many would be glad to vote for him for senator.

The members of the Legislature average younger in appearance than they did last year and gray beards are few. LANDON.

A farmer once told us that he would not be without Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup if it cost $5 a bottle.

Mr. J. M. Keesler, merchant tailor, 42 German street, Baltimore, Md., says—"I find Salvation Oil effectual and speedy in the cure of neuralgia."

The breath of a chronic catarrh patient is often so offensive that he cannot go into society and he becomes an object of disgust. After a time ulceration sets in, the spongy bones are attacked, and frequently entirely destroyed. A constant source of discomfort is the dripping of the purulent secretions into the throat, sometimes producing inveterate bronchitis, which in its turn has been the exciting cause of pulmonary disease. The brilliant results which have attended its use for years past properly designates Ely's Cream Balm as by far the best and only real cure.

Benton's Hair Grower. All who are Bald, all who are becoming Bald, all who do not want to be Bald, all who are troubled with Dandruff or Itching of the scalp; should use Benton's Hair Grower. Eighty per cent of those using it have grown hair. It never fails to stop the hair from falling. Through sickness and fevers the hair sometimes falls off in a short time, and although the person may have been bald for years, if you use Benton's Hair Grower according to directions you are sure of a growth of hair. In hundreds of cases we have produced a good crop of hair on those who have been bald and glazed for years, we have fully substantiated the following facts:

We grow hair in 80 cases out of a hundred, no matter how long bald.

Unlike other preparations, it contains no sugar of lead, or vegetable or mineral poisons.

It is a specific for falling hair, dandruff, and itching of the scalp.

The Hair Grower is a hair food, and its composition is almost exactly like the oil which supplies the hair with its vitality.

Her Catch.

Oh, she's going to marry a lo:d,
Yum, yum!
Her heart she will bury,
His debts are large, very;
And down with the dust she must come,
Come, come!
But still she is brimming with glee;
For American girls a round sum
Some, some
Will pay for a blue-blooded bum,
Bum, bum,
For love is not vital
Compared to a title,
And happy I hope she will be.

ATHLETIC EXERCISES IN WINTER.

Nothing is easier for a man who has a spare hour or two in the course of the day than to indulge in athletic exercise during the warm weather. Rowing, walking, running, baseball, lacrosse, cricket and other games lure one into the open air, where the muscles are hardened and the lungs strengthened by exercise that it is a pleasure to take. But when the winter comes and all these sports set aside, when the hurry and pressure of the busy season makes greater demands on a man's time, he finds himself without exercise, and the physical system begins to run down.

The question which many young men of moderate means have to ask themselves in the winter is: "How can I acquire for myself enough exercise to keep me from losing the benefits of last summer's sport?" The answer to this is not so difficult as it may at first appear to be. Of course there is no difficulty at all for young who can afford to belong to a wealthy athletic club, which has a good gymnasium. Nor are those sufferers who have the time to go to the several gymnasiums in the city that are not too expensive for a large number of young men. But there are many who have to hasten down town early in the morning to offices, and who have to work until 6 o'clock in the evening. What are they to do?

If a man's occupation keeps him sitting still all day, what he needs is a walk; but not the kind of a walk that is ordinarily taken. A leisurely stroll homeward up Broadway is not the best exercise. Let the young man begin by riding up town till within a mile of his home. He should then get off the car, button up his coat, throw out his chest, hold up his head, keep his mouth closed, let his arms swing freely and walk home at a good brisk pace that will bring him to his house with panting breath and glowing cheeks. Plenty of cold water and a rough towel should then be applied to the neck, chest and face. After that dinner will be a treat. The walk should gradually be made longer, but never long enough to tire the walker. He should always reach home feeling good for another mile. If he is fond of running, let him select a street that is not crowded, and do a fairly fast quarter of a mile at the end of his trip. For the development and hardening of the arms and chest, for the strengthening of the lungs and the benefit of the circulation nothing is better than a pair of Indian clubs. If a young man can spare the time he should swing a pair of clubs, not heavier than six pounds for fifteen minutes when he first gets out of bed. After that let him bathe his whole body in moderately cold water—ice water gives an unnecessary shock—and rub down briskly with a hard towel. If the young man has not fifteen minutes to spare every morning, let him use heavier clubs—say eight pounds—and swing them a shorter time. He should always keep the clubs going till his arms ache. More good is to be got out of swinging a light pair of clubs a long time than swinging a heavy pair a short time; but the latter is a good deal better than no exercise at all and will keep the muscles in good order.

It is a good thing at night before going to bed to exercise with dumb-bells. One should never use dumb-bells alone, however, because while they harden the muscles they also stiffen them. Club swinging will preserve their elasticity. It is not necessary to learn more than four or five movements with clubs where the sole object is exercise. Good clubs can now be bought for a dollar a pair and dumb-bells cost only five cents a pound, so that these athletic implements are within the reach of all. By following out the suggestions here given young men may preserve through the winter the benefits of the summer, and those whose occupations prevent them from obtaining athletic exercise all the year round will find these simple methods of incalculable advantage.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Here is one piece of Washington social news which I have not seen in any of the columns of the fashionable intelligence of recent publications. The brother of the wife of a well-known United States senator is at present driving a street cab in Washington. His sister is a lady of great social ambitions. She often visits Europe, and I have seen a number of paragraphs noting engagements of her numerous daughters to different scions of nobility. The odd part of the story is that this very driver of a street cab is often employed by his sister in a professional capacity. This uncle of fashionable nieces has been often seen driving his niece to town, she carrying in her hand a bouquet that cost more than his week's earnings. This devoted uncle has been seen sitting on his box freezing his fingers and toes during the season, waiting for the outcome of his fashionable sister and nieces. It is an incident of Washington society that is as curious as it is picturesque. It should be noted by the writer of the future Washington novel.—Washington Letter.

SAID THEM TWICE.—The children are always up to little expedients to help them out of tight places. Little six-year old, one of these chilly nights, tumbled into his nightgown and into bed, without paying that strict attention to his evening devotions which his mother had taught him to do.

"Why, my dear, you didn't say your prayers, did you?"

"You're right. I did not. I said them twice last night, so I wouldn't have to."—Hartford Post.

Sauce for the Goose. Mrs. Charles (decollete, to husband dressed in trousers and undershirt)—Why, Charley you are not going as you are! Charles—Why yes; aren't you?—Life.

The depth of London misery was illustrated by two scenes witnessed last week, writes a London correspondent. One was at Billingsgate, where gracious distributors were wisely intrenched behind iron bars. Brawny men struggled and fought against the bars for the sodden pudding and muddy soup until they were torn and bleeding, while women and children, who were unable to get near, sat on the curbstone and cried hopelessly. Another was at a dinner given by the St. Giles Christian mission, where the criminal classes were invited to come and satisfy their hunger. At the door scores of honest men, who had never seen the inside of a prison, accused themselves of crimes of all sorts in order to gain admission, only to be ejected by the attendants, who were not slow to discover the story of fraud by their hungry, honest faces and horny hands.

My little boy, aged four and one-half years, had learned the Mikado's song, and did not quite understand the meaning of the chorus, which runs as follows:

"My object all sublime,
I shall achieve in time,
To make the punishment fit the crime,
The punishment fit the crime."

I had endeavored to illustrate the idea; the following morning at breakfast, he began to play with the cruit stand. I told him not to do so. He persisted and at last upset and spilled the red pepper on the table cloth, I said: "Now Allan, you were disobedient and upset the pepper castor, and I should make the punishment fit the crime by putting some of the red pepper on your tongue." He looked up like a flash and asked: Would the punishment be the same papa, if I upset the sugar-bowl?"—Babyhood.

THE WORST OF IT.—In recently published recollections of Lyman Beecher it is told that while walking home one night with a big book under his arm a skunk suddenly crossed his path. He threw the book at it and when he reached home they had to fumigate him and bury his clothes. A few weeks after the catastrophe one of his sons came rushing to his father's presence with a pamphlet in his hand, saying excitedly: "Look here, father what this scalawag has written about you. You must answer him." "Pooh! pooh!" said the old doctor, "I'll have nothing to do with him. I issued a whole quarto volume against a skunk lately, and got the worst of it."

HIGH UP AND LOW DOWN.—It were possible to rise up above the atmosphere which surrounds the earth we should see nothing but an intense and sharply-defined ball of fire, while everything else would be wrapped in total darkness. There could be no difference of light without an atmosphere or some similar medium for it to act upon; but if the air around us extended to a height of 700 miles the rays of the sun could not penetrate it, and we would be left in darkness. At the depth of 700 feet in the ocean the light ceases altogether, one-half of the light being absorbed in passing through seven feet of the purest water.

It is said that when a cigar maker gets right malicious and desires to do his employer great damage he gets to work on the best brand and then puts a single hair from his head in each cigar. The trick is exceedingly difficult to detect, and will destroy the flavor of every cigar it is applied to, with a far-reaching injury to the reputation of the brand.—Tobacco.

A man whose name would have been good on a check for $2,000,000 not long ago, spent two hours in the back office of a Wall street broker one day last week waiting to get the chance to borrow $10 from one who used to be his clerk. Speculation had brought him to poverty and made the clerk a millionaire, all within a year or two.—New York Times.

Foggins:—Do you see that young woman over there? I understand that her father's a wealth planter.

Boggins:—Nonsense! Why, her father's an undertaker.

Foggins:—That's all right. I did not say what he planted.—Rambler.

A Bridgeport woman has complained to the police that her Salvation Army husband was making life around home miserable by too much singing and praying and assaults on her and the children because they do not coincide with his peculiar methods.—Waterbury American.

We must kill the old idea of mechanical dying, after which a man goeth straight to to heaven, perfect and angelic. Heaven is not a place where angels stand around like wax figures and sing hallelujah.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Stranger—"Fifty dolllars, eh, fur the nag? Does the lot go with it?" Ruralite—"Sartinly not; what do you want the lot fur?" Stranger—"Why, to bury the hoss."—The Judge.

If charity covereth a multitude of sins, it might be well to purchase some of it for the use of the ballet.—New Haven News.

You often hear a woman say, "There's no use talking," but she doesn't think so just the same.

"We say at night, 'Would God the day were here,' And say at dawn, 'Would God the day were dead'."

How well Swinburne has emphasized the feelings of thousands of earth's fairest daughters, who are laid prostrate by disease's fell-hand. But instead of the anguish of despair, what a song of joy ascends from the hearts of those ladies who have used Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," and by its means been restored to the glorious sunshine of health. It is a positive remedy for those derangements, irregularities and weaknesses so common to our best female population. Price reduced to $1. By druggists.

TWENTY YEARS' RECORD.

Rev. J. W. Macomber, Mahopac, Putnam Co., N. Y., writes: "About twenty years ago I was laid aside for nearly eight weeks with a severe cold and congestion of the lungs, and was nearly discouraged when I providentially came across Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer. In a short time I found myself completely well. Since that time I have used it with universal success in my family."

Washington, when asked by a friend during what proved to be his last sickness to take some medicine for his cold, replied, "I never take medicine for a cold, let it go as it came." In a few days he was dead. Never neglect a cold, but always have on hand Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer, the great remedy for coughs and colds. 25c., 50c. and $1.00 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

Mothers, teething and fretful children need Dr. Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial. Druggists, 25c.

It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipissewa, Juniper Berries and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Dr. Sweet is Coming.

SEE THE ROUTE.

UNEXAMPLED! UNPRECEDENTED!

Dr. Sweet, the Celebrated Natural Physician and Surgeon of 28 Union Park, Boston, devotes an entire year

TO FREE TREATMENT

Of the Invalid Public of New England in order to more universally introduce the famous "Sweet Method" in the radical cure of obstinate Chronic Diseases.

CONVERSE HOUSE, PALMER, MASS.,

FOR ONE DAY ONLY, TUESDAY, JANUARY 25TH.

Everybody invited. No one excluded. Rich or poor, artisan or autocrat, all alike heartily welcome. Invalids desirious of giving something from their abundance can do so but are not obliged to under any circumstance. "Give as it is given unto you." "With such measure ye meet it shall be measured to you again." For years it has been the day dream of Dr. Sweet to amass a sufficient competency to make one tour of the country, entirely free to suffering humanity. THE TIME HAS COME. The Doctor has set aside a fund to defray the expense of the entire tour of not less than one year. Feeling that the "Sweet Method" requires only to be known by toiling millions to be universally adopted by the sick everywhere, Dr. Sweet undertakes the stupendous expense and time in giving to it the widest renown. Now is the time to get a correct idea of just what ails you, without expense. Free and full examinations by Dr. Sweet's natural gifts, without answering a question. Invalids with slender means will thus be enabled to judge of the comparative merits of other systems and the "Sweet Method." Send the news to your invalid friends.

ROUTE.—Palmer, Converse House, Tuesday, Jan. 25; Ware, Hampshire House, Wednesday, Jan. 26; Warren, Warren House, Thursday, 27; East Brookfield, East Brookfield House, Friday, 28; Spencer, Massasoit House, Saturday, 29; Worcester, Monday, for one week, beginning Jan. 31.

Invalids must be on hand early as above dates cannot be changed. Letters addressed as above will reach Dr. Sweet. A limited number of desirable cases will be registered as private patients at reasonable rates. The very worst cases cured by the "Sweet Method" after all fail. Office hours—begin at 8 a. m. and close at 9 p. m. sharp. 3w41

Prayer.

As Satan passed through heaven
From a walk on earth one day,
The Lord looked up and questioned him:
"Didst hear my creatures pray?"

"Ay, Lord, I heard their prayers resound
Whene'er I listening stood;
But, by my soul, not one of them
Prayed for his brother's good."

Then looked Jehovah fire and flame,
And spoke his first decree:
"Who makes a selfish prayer is thine,
The others come to me."

Then all that night on heaven's walls
The Lord and Satan stood,
To see how many sons of men
Would pray for a brother's good.

Alas, they watched there many an hour,
And yet there came no sounds,
The poor they prayed for pennies, and
The rich they prayed for pounds.

The ugly prayed for beauty, and
The awkward prayed for grace;
The old ones prayed for youthful looks
To hide a wrinkled face.

The limping prayed for healthy joints,
The red-haired prayed for brown,
The short ones prayed for longer legs,
The long to be cut down.

The brown eyes prayed for blue ones, and
The cross-eyed prayed for straight;
The fat ones prayed for melting down,
The lean ones prayed for weight.

The doctor prayed for sickness, and
The undertaker death;
The captives prayed for sunshine, and
The phthisicky for breath.

The maiden prayed for lover's vows,
The soldier prayed for war,
The beggar prayed for a horse to ride,
The drunkard prayed for "more."

The sick man prayed for break of day,
The thief for longer night,
The miser prayed for more gold,
The blind man prayed for sight.

At last there came a tearful voice
Up to the starlit sky;
"Oh, may my uncle's soul this night
Rest with the Lord on high."

"There's one for me!" Jehovah cried,
"Not so!" the devil said;
"He's heir to all his uncle's wealth,
Hence wants the old man dead."

Just then there came another voice
In supplicating tones:
"Oh, may the grave be late to close O'er neighbor David's bones."

"There's surely one for me at last!"
But Satan cried, "Not yet!
He merely wants the man to live
Until he pays a debt."

And so they waited until the stars
Went out at break of day;
Then Satan seized his bag of souls
And sped his homeward way.

Upon high heaven's glittering wall
Long had they listening stood,
But not a mortal all that night,
Prayed for his brother's good.

HER DIAMONDS.

"You know, dear, we are not the least bit in love with each other," Lucy Bassett said, reaching up to pull my whiskers and laying a coaxing cheek against my shoulder. "It would be very foolish for you and me to fall in love with each other, and we just won't; there!"

And to emphasize the declaration. the softest little fingers in the world being still twisted in my whiskers, pulled my face down to a level with hers, and this girl who was not a bit in love with me, kissed me.

There's a great many different ways of kissing, you know. There are cold lips, and dry lips, and oily lips, and lips that glide past your face like ghosts, and lips that you'd rather have a blow than kisses from; but Lucy's kisses were half-opened rosebuds at 5 o'clock of a June morning.

Lucy herself was a whole garden of roses—dew, color, fragrance and all. When she looked at you, you felt as if your whole heart was exhaling at your eyes; and when she smiled upon you, it did not matter what sort of thunder or lightning there was in any other part of the globe, it was distilled sunshine where you were. I don't know if Lucy were pretty, but she had a lot of pretty characteristics. She was a quality, like a gold wine that is better the longer you keep it, and that gets a new flavor every time you taste—a more moulted sparkle every time it drips over the beaker's rim.

The beauty of her eyes was in their expression; of her hair, in its brightness; her face was a blossom, her hands birds, and if the white wings of her fingers fluttered across your horizon, you might as well be blind for all seeing anything else but her. In short you see I was in love with Lucy, if Lucy was not in love with me, and it is my private opinion that we were very much in love with each other, in spite of Mrs. Anstruther's parting admonition, that we were on no account to commit so absurd a blunder.

Lucy and I were both orphans. Lucy was own neice to Mrs. Anstruther, whom she called Aunt Dora, and whose prospective heiress she was supposed to be, provided she married to please her.

I was a nephew to Mrs. Anstruther's husband, who was dead, and heir to nothing but my wits—a rather slender property, Lucy derisively assured me, and scarcely likely to yield an income equal to the probable demand of a pair so extravagantly inclined as we.

"So you see it would never, never do," Lucy would say, with a roguish pout of her rosy lips at me; "and Aunt Dora needn't be one bit afraid, as far as I am concerned.

Aunt Dora had been absent from the Grove some three weeks now, summonsed away by the illness of a friend, just as I had got myself comfortably bestowed in her best chamber, with a dislocated shoulder, which injury had been received in a struggle with a refractory steed which had tried to run away with Miss Lucy.

Mrs. Anstruther was warranted in considering the incident as dangerously romantic in its tendencies, and she left us together at the Grove with manifest reluctance. She had, however, great confidence in Lucy, and she gave her distinctly to understand, in my presence, that if we two made such ninnies of ourselves as to turn lovers while she was gone, we would never see the color of her money either of us.

Well for some days, I, for one, felt like little less but groaning, and then gradually I became conscious of a velvet touch that swallowed pain, of a hovering face that might have been an angel's, of a voice deliciously attuned that chorused all sorts of soothing and coaxing speeches, with a "dear." I was petted and babied and pittied to an extent that I don't mind confessing here, and it was the means of my pretending sick a trifle longer than was really neccessary, but I don't think many would have blamed me, under the circumstances.

The consequence was that I was only fairly established downstairs again when Mrs. Anstruther returned. She eyed Lucy and me very sharpely, and we two bore the inspection with great demureness, till, chancing to encounter glances, a spark from Lucy's roguishness lit on me, and we went off into explosions of laughter that nearly took Mrs. Anstruther off her feet with amazement. However, she laughed, too, presently, and in the same breath announced that company was coming to the Grove the following week.

"Shall I go, Mrs. Anstruther?" I asked. "I am sufficiently recovered, I think."

"Certainly not," she answered, sharply. "Whatever mischief is done can't be made any worse by your staying; and it might be as well, besides, for Lucy to have an opportunity of comparing you with other people. If I am not much mistaken she will know a gentleman when she sees him."

"If I don't, aunt, it will not be the fault of Felix here," spoke Lucy, coming swiftly beside me and pinching my arm.

"Ta-ta, Miss! Impertinence, Felix is very well; but wait till next week."

"I presume I shall, and considerably longer," Lucy answered, saucily.

"Miss Lucy Bassett, I should like to know what this means?" demanded Mrs. Anstruther, loftly.

"Nothing very serious—does it, Felix?" laughed Lucy. "We are too well warned, aunty, dear."

"I don't know about that," said Mrs. Anstruther, sailing from the room in a very evident passion, and sending for me to her apartment half-an-hour after.

I submitted to the curious tirade that followed with mingled irritation and good humor, and offered at least six times in in the course of it to leave the Grove that very day, but Mrs. Anstruther would not hear to such a proceeding.

Lucy was waiting on the landing outside when I left her aunt, and she stood on tiptoe to whisper in my ear: "You don't mind, do you, dear?" and left the warm print of rosy lips on my cheek, I can assure you I did not mind so much as I might.

When I left Mrs. Anstruther I had fully intended to quit the grove, whether or no, the following day, but that half-dozen words with Lucy left me undecided again. I was an idiot for staying; first, because I was deliberately sacrificing a very pretty prospect in life by not going; and second because I might have known beforehand what sort of an experience the next week's would be likely to be. But men are idiots when a pretty girl is concerned, and I was a great deal more bewildered with Lucy than I owned to myself. I spoiled my own mess, too, with my conceit. I am willing to own that men are more conceited than women, but then, they have so much more to make them so. Why, only think of a woman like Lucy Bassett making "sweet eyes" at you.

I am willing to own, at this day, that I had not at that time one misgiving as to how it was likely to turn with Lucy and me if I stayed. My going or staying was a mere question of self-abnegation. Should I stay and win the girl who loved me in the face of Mrs. Anstruther's threats of poverty and starvation, or should I generously leave her to forget me as fast as she could, and bestow her matchlessness upon some prince of the crew that were coming to the grove that week?

I was not generous. I did not at all relish being forgotten, and I stayed.

Mrs. Anstruther's company came in due time—a household of them, too—gentlemen and ladies; some married, some single; the young ladies pretty creatures enough, and the gentlemen good talkers and well dressed.

I understood long before the passage of the first day what Mrs. Anstruther meant by her talk about gentlemen. She meant men who owed their right to be ranked above the "plebs" to their tailor. My best coat was of last year's cut and a trifle seedy, having done duty alternately as every-day geer and Sunday toggery. My boots were neither patent leather nor morocco, and my unmentionables, though as well kept as could possibly be expected under the circumstances, had quite lost that beautiful shapeliness of limb which characterized those of Mrs. Anstruther's guests.

In vain I kept repeating to myself, "A man's a man for a' that," and "Dress doesn't make the man." I was humiliatingly sure that I wasn't half a man because of my seedy garb.

Mrs. Anstruther watched me, and I felt, rejoiced at my discomfort, what she could see of it. Out of sheer revenge I devoted myself to Lucy. Secure in Lucy's fondness for me I took airs upon myself, and for every sneer I imagined flung at my clothes I managed to make Lucy snub the sneerer.

I don't know how it was; I think I had taken a little too much wine that evening, and there was a Count Leopold Keirst who was especially affected by Mrs. Anstruther for Lucy, and who was nothiug loath himself. The man was the meerest dandy, empty-headed as a rattle-box, positively nothing but clothes and title; but because I hated him for daring to aspire to Lucy I insisted upon her openly insulting him by dancing with me when she had promised him, and they had even got their places upon the floor. I suppose I was mad with jealousy, envy and wine, and I saw Mrs. Anstruther shaking her head at Lucy from a corner. I insisted that Lucy should dance with me instead of the count, and she refused, of course.

Half an hour afterward, carpet-bag in hand, I had left the house, and by morning was miles on my journey cityward.

I had recovered my senses by that time, and was sufficiently conscious what an idiot I had made of myself.

Whatever conceit was left in me then was taken out before the day was done.

As I got off the cars at noon a strange man put his hand on my shoulder.

I was arrested for stealing Mrs. Anstruther's diamonds. She had telegraphed to have it done, and Lucy had not hindered her.

It was odd, but I never felt myself more a man than at that moment.

The touch of that terrible finger of disgrace was like the prick of the surgeon's lancet to a swooning consciousness.

By noon of the next day Mrs. Anstruther herself came to the city to me in my prison cell.

The woman was positively wild about her diamonds.

"Oh, give them back to me, Felix, and I won't prosecute the thing. I've got money enough to hush the matter, and I will; and set you up in business, besides. Only give me back my diamonds, Felix, how could you have the heart to touch them? Why, man, they've been in the family more than two hundred years."

Mrs. Anstruther wrung her hands wildly as she pleaded, and clung to me when I would have risen from my chair.

"Madame, you will never see your diamonds more, if the return of them depends on me," said I.

"You ungrateful boy!" cried Mrs. Anstruther.

I smiled.

"After all I have done for you."

"I am aware that I owe Mrs. Anstruther one debt which it will be impossible for me ever to repay."

Do you mean Lucy, sir? Give me back my diamonds, and you shall have even her."

"Madame values her diamonds at a curious price."

"Do you mean to keep them in the face of everything? What good will they do you now?"

"Madame forgets that there is a limit to durance vile, even for stealing diamonds. Many a man has toiled longer and harder for a fortune like that."

Mrs. Anstruther thought I was in earnest. Her face whitened and she trembled with agitition.

"Well, then, Felix," she said, "if you are so hard as that I must leave you to the law, I should have liked to save the diamonds, and avoid disgrace to the family, but you will not permit me."

"Mrs. Anstruther," said I, putting a detaining hand on her arm as she was going, "do you honestly believe I know anything about your diamonds?"

She stopped and looked at me in odd perplexity.

"Who else could?"

"When did you first miss them, Mrs. Anstruther?"

"In the morning after you went away."

"When did you see them last before that?"

"I always look for them before I sleep. I did so that night."

"And you did not retire, of course till after your guests. Did they stop dancing any before twelve?"

"I don't know about that, but it was after two o'clock before I got to bed. I remember noticing it was so late as that before I sent Lucy away. I had her in my room, and talked to her pretty plainly about you."

"Pray, Mrs. Anstruther, what time is the night express due at the Grove?"

"Oh, at one o'clock you know——"

She came to a sudden stop; her face turned red and white in a minute.

"What a horrible wretch I am!" she cried, covering her face with her hands, and then holding them both out to me. "Why, you must have been miles and miles away before I told Lucy good night. Felix, I am ashamed of myself. Can you ever forgive me?"

"It is of no consequence, madam," said I, frigidly.

"Indeed it is, but I will make it up to you. You shall see that I will, Felix."

I was duly restored to honorable air again, and went back to the Grove with Mrs. Anstruther on the first train thereafter. But I had not forgotten her.

Mrs. Anstruther looked grave and anxious during all that homeward ride. She was thinking of her diamonds, and I almost believe she would have been willing that the family should have been disgraced by my stealing them for the sake of finding them again.

We reached the Grove at dark, and when the one o'clock express came down from the opposite direction the detective made his appearance, pretending to be a new guest.

Lucy met me like a woman. I had not asked Mrs. Anstruther about her, and whatever her lovely, speaking face might have said to me, if I had given it opportunity to express itself, it said nothing now but what my own did, and that was cold and stern as I could make it.

We were mostly at breakfast when Mrs. Anstruther's new guest came down and was introduced to us as Mr. Clemens.

By the merest chance in the world my eyes were on Count Leopold Keirst as his fell for the first time on Mr. Clemens.

A instantaneous change flashed over his countenance, a swift, momentary pallor that left his very lips white.

He sat near the door, and when I again looked in his direction, after Mr. Clemens had taken his seat, he had vanished.

Making a scarcely audible excuse to Mrs. Anstruther, I quitted the room also and passed noiselessly up the carpeted stairway which led to the count's apartment. But before I reached it I heard the door open, and, drawing back a step, heard him pass along the opposite extremity of the hall, where a glass door opend into the garden. As I caught the sound of his retreating steps I followed, and looked through the blinds after him.

But was that the Count Leopold? Scarcely, though there was something about him oddly like the count and then, in a moment, I knew him again, in spite of the disguise he had so quickly donned.

He crossed the garden, leaped the fence, and struck at a good round pace into a path which led across the fields to the depot.

"Eureka!" I cried, audibly, and fleeing to the breakfast parlor again, asked Mr. Clemens, with small ceremony, if I could have a word with him in the hall.

His face flushed eagerness while I told my story, and before the last words were out of my mouth he had snatched one hat from the hall rack for himself and crammed another on my head, and was dragging me toward the depot.

There was a train due at 9.30 and we had hardly time to reach it. But we did reach it—Mr. Clemens entering at one door of the depot while I sauntered idly through the other. Our man was at that instant at the ticket office. He wheeled as Clemens put his nand on him and flashed out a revolver. With a wrench that left his arm helpless, he twisted the weapon from him, and then in a very brief time he had the handcuffs on him.

Clemens knew him the instant he fairly saw him. The Count Leopold Keirst was an old offender, no more a count than Clemens himself, whom he recognized first, and profiting by that recognition would have neatly made his escape, but for the chance that set me on his track.

We found Mrs. Anstruther's diamonds on him, unset, and sewed fast in a belt he had buckled around him. Mrs. Anstruther, when she heard the story and beheld the proofs in the return of her glittering treasures, rewarded me for my share in her good fortune with a single sentence:

"No one knew of my absurd suspicion of you, Felix—not even Lucy."

Lucy's sweet face was very pale when she met my flashing glances, but she did not leave her aunt's side.

"Can Lucy forgive me for what has been amiss in me toward her?" I asked, sadly. "Let us at least be friends—dear."

She flushed at the words, but did not lift her eyes.

"Ta-ta," said Mrs. Anstruther, "friends indeed! I shall divide my money between you, and Felix may go into business with his share any day he likes. You'll be glad enough to make up with him, miss."

Whereat Lucy began to cry, and slipped out of the room before her aunt could stop her. She hid herself in her chamber the best part of the day, but I was on the watch and knew when she at last crept forth in the dusk of the evening and stole into the music room.

My sweet girl looked a little frightened when I followed her, but she did not refuse to hide her fears on my shoulder, and so without words we knew that we were all in all to each other once more.

THE CITY OF ROSES.

New Orleans is said to be delightful in the late fall months, before the winter rains set in, but I believe it looks its best in March and April. This is owing to its roses. If the town was not attached to the name of the Crescent City it might very well adopt the title of the City of Roses. So kind are climate and soil that magnificent varieties of this queen of flowers, which at the north bloom only in hot-houses, or with great care are planted out doors in the heat of our summer, thrive here in the open air in prodigal abundance and beauty. In April the town is literally embowered in them; they fill dooryards and gardens, they overrun the porches, they climb the sides of the houses, they spread over the trees, they take possession of trellises and fences and walls, perfuming the air and entrancing the heart with color. In the outlying parks, like that of the Jockey Club and the florist's gardens at Carrollton, there are fields of them, acres of the finest sorts, waving in the spring wind. Alas! can beauty ever satisfy? This wonderful spectacle fills one with I know not what exquisite longing.

These flowers pervade the town, old women on the street corners sit behind banks of them, the florists' windows blush with them, friends dispatch to each other great baskets of them, the favorites at the theater and the amateur performers stand behind high barricades of roses which the good-humored audience piles upon the stage, everybody carries roses and wears roses, and the houses overflow with them. In this passion for flowers you may read a prominent trait of the people. For myself, I like to see a spot on this earth where beauty is enjoyed for itself and let run to waste, but if ever the industrial spirit of the French-Italians should prevail among the littoral of Louisianna and Mississippi, the raising of flowers for the manufacture of perfumes would become a most profitable industry.—Harper's Magazine.

A LABOR CREED.—I believe that in the adoption of the philosphy of the religion of Christ as a practical creed for the conduct of business lies the surest and the speediest solution of those industrial difficulties which are exciting the minds of men to-day, and leading many to think that the crisis of goverment is at hand.—Carroll D. Wright in The Unitarian Review.

Best.

Mother, I see you with the nursery light,
Leading your babies all in white,
To their sweet rest;
Christ, the Good Shepherd, carries mine to-night,
And that is best!

I cannot help tears when I see them twine
Their fingers in yours, and their bright curls shine
On your warm breast;
But the Saviour's is purer than yours or mine,
He can love best!

You tremble each hour because your arms
Are weak; you heart is wrung with alarms,
And sore oppressed;
My darlings are safe and out of reach of harms,
And that is best.

You know over yours may hang even now
Pain and disease, whose fulfilling slow
Naught can arrest;
Mine in God's garden run to and fro,
And that is best.

You know that of yours the feeblest one
And dearest may live long years alone,
Unloved, unblest;
Mine are cherished of saints around God's throne,
And that is best.

You must dread for yours the crime that scars,
Dark guilt unwashed by repentant tears,
And unconfessed;
Mine entered spotless on eternal years,
Oh, how much best!

But grief is selfish, and I cannot see
Always why I should so stricken be
More than the rest;
But I know that, as well as for them, for me
God did the best!

A GRIM BANKER.

Baron Henickstein was a banker in Vienna, to whom I had a letter of introduction, and with some friends I called upon him. He received us cordially. When our business was completed the baron invited us to visit his private museum, which filled an upper floor of the bank building. It had taken the noble banker some fifty years to form this rare and valuable collection of antiquities. After making the tour of the long hall the baron drew from his pocket a massive iron key, and unlocking a door at one end beckoned us to follow him into a dimly lighted room. On entering we saw ranged about it a series of tall and narrow mahogany wardrobes, the doors of which our host rapidly threw open, disclosing to our astonished gaze a grim and ghastly human skeleton in each.

"Ladies," said this extraordinary man, "let me introduce you to this, my select circle of intimate friends—friends, ladies, in whom I confide all, and who reveal nothing. Here is my beautiful Etalka, the love of my youth, who cast aside her flesh half a century ago and is still true to me. This is all that remains to me of old Heinrich, the faithful cashier of forty years of my father and myself. Enter and fear nothing!" and as much afraid of refusing as to obey, we passed the box and found ourselves standing in a close, cell-like apartment, hung with heavy black draperies, and lavishly ornamented with armorial bearings, numerous death's heads and cross-bones. Nearly filling the place was a huge casket or coffin of ebony, lined with black velvet, and arranged to receive a body; and on the silver plate attached to the lid was inscribed the baron's name and title, with a blank space left for his age and date of death. To the foot of the coffin was attached a parchment scroll, containing instructions for the baron's funeral, in which, among other stipulations, he directed that the horses attached to the hearse should be driven at a fast trot to a tune he had his music box play for us.—Correspondence of Cleveland Leader.

HEART DISEASE AND HURRY.

Almost every day we hear of persons dying of "heart disease." In most cases, we might as well say "they died for want of breath." That man and woman may have heart disease, as well as lung disease, or difficulty of any other organ, is true; but many cases of "heart disease" should be attributed to most wanton improprieties, which overtax the lungs and heart and the whole machinery. As we passed through a gate of the Broad street railway station, at Philadelphia, the other day, a young man fell in the passage and died almost immediately. The doctor summoned pronounced the cause heart disease. A gentleman standing near said: "If you had seen him running faster than our street car came, from Eighth street, to catch his train, you would have said he died from hurrying." There was probably no disease of the heart or any other organ, but an over-taxing of all the organs. By this foolish desire to catch a train or reach a point a little sooner than we can safely do it, some of us are frequently jeopardizing our health and perhaps our lives. If we behave ourselves, and lived and acted in moderation, we should have less deaths from heart disease.—Health and Home.

A PUNCTUATED CONVERSATION.

"Little children should never get angry!" said Grandpa Binks to the little second-story Binks. "Little children should always think twice before saying naughty words!"

There was a naughty boy in the Binks household, and he had found an old razor that looked like a saw. He put it in grandpa's box.

Grandpa was going out that afternoon, and he had to shave.

He got the lather all nice and ready, put a towel under his chin and pulled the razor from the box.

"Remember what I told you this morning!" he said as the children, in answer to a wink from the bad boy, began to quarrel; "alway think twice before you,—— —!! ◡ — ☞ !—!—¶ & * ☞ * — & * — ! ⁂ ! ¶ ! ‡ ! & —."

And then, as Grandpa Binks looked at the bad boy, he took another look at the razor and remarked that he guessed he'd go out and see if it looked like rain.—New York World.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, 1887.

CHARLES B. FARWELL is to succeed Gen. Logan in the United States Senate.

A SERIOUS coal famine is threatened if the strike of the coal handlers at shipping points in New Jersey is not settled very soon.

DR. F. L. BURDEN of Attleboro was elected chairman of the Republican state committee at Boston last Saturday, and Robert A. Southworth secretary. The Democratic committee has P. A. Collins for chairman, and A. B. Alger and P. J. Donovan for secretaries.

DISGRACEFUL scenes have characterized the organization of the Legislatures of New Jersey and Indiana this week, the United States senatorship being the inciting cause in both cases. The parties are nearly evenly divided, and each wants to secure the senatorial prize by hook or crook.

A BILL creating a department of agriculture has passed the House at Washington by a nearly unanimous vote, and it is thought it will pass the Senate and become a law. The number of executive departments has not been increased in a generation, though the machinery of government has grown more and more complex, and all the departments are over-crowded with business.

KING CAUCUS has received a black eye at the state house this week, and all efforts of the Long men to have the Republicans of the Legislature commit themselves, formally or informally, on the senatorial question, in advance of the joint session next Tuesday, have failed. Both the Dawes and the Long men claim this result as a victory for their side. Next Tuesday will tell the story.

BISMARCK made a remarkable speech in the German Reichstag Tuesday, in an appeal to that body to vote the seven years clause in the military supply and increase of troops bill. "The past teaches us," said he, "that we cannot count upon peace with France as permanent," and his whole address breathed the spirit of war with that power, while he at the same time assured his hearers that the relations of Germany with Russia and Austria were most harmonious. His bold and warlike talk, and the increased appropriations for the French army, do not bode well for peace between these countries.

THE Boston Globe says "there is something marvelous in the patience shown by the western part of the commonwealth over the distribution of political honors." It recalls the fact that the governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, treasurer, attorney general, president of the Senate, speaker of the House and so on through the list, are eastern men, a solitary senatorship being all that this part of the state now has, and even this is to be taken away if they can get it. The Globe naturally concludes that this wholesale self aggrandizement by the east cannot be regarded with equanimity up this way, and artlessly adds: "If the Democratic party had the power there would be a fair distribution of the honors." All right; let the Democrats in the Legislature show their desire for fair play next week by voting for the reëlection of Senator Dawes. They cannot elect a Democrat, but they may help to return a tried and true public servant.

"OH, DEAR, what can the matter be?" Some very loud dissatisfaction with Sheriff Brooks is coming to light from the Democratic camp. Just hear the Holyoke Herald take on, for instance:—

> The Democratic party has been caught napping before; renegades and hypocrites there have been who have deceived its leaders, but from none has the slap in the face been so galling as that coming from Simon Brooks. And why should a slap from him not be galling? Who is he, or what is he? He is simply Simon Brooks and no more; he represents the 11 letters by which his name is spelled and that is all. Unknown to fame, unknown to the world outside of Holyoke, he was taken from his obscure position as a clerk and hoisted into a responsible office by the Democrats. They paid his expenses, they lost their time, their money, yes, and even their friends to secure Simon Brooks' election. And now to be laughed at and despised by their own creature—by the insignificant individual whom they made their standard-bearer—is too much for human nature to bear without a murmur. A slap from Sanderson could be suffered, a slap from any man of either mental or physical proportions could be tolerated, but a slap from Simon Brooks is too much.

We are astonished that the Democrats should have stultified themselves by nominating such an "insignificant individual" for this high office, for of course (?) they did not expect him to be a mere tool in the hands of the managers. But the sheriff has clearly disappointed somebody badly. The editor of the Herald should go down to the shore and cool off by the sad sea waves.

JOHN ROACH, the noted shipbuilder of New York and Chester, Pa., died on Monday at the age of about 71. Mr. Roach came to this country from Ireland at the age of 16, penniless and friendless, but full of pluck and muscle. His plant at Chester is said to be the largest and most complete in the world, and from it he has launched 114 iron ships. When the Democratic administration came into power at Washington it refused to accept the Dolphin, which he had built, when it had complied with all the tests, for many months, and decided that the contracts for the other three ships building in his yards were not binding. This led to his assignment, though his assets largely exceeded his liabilities, and a searching examination of the three cruisers resulted in a declaration that the work was progressing strictly according to contract. The apparent persecution of the government undoubtedly hastened his death, for he was a man of strict integrity,—was never sued, and no ship built by him was ever transferred to the owners until it was perfectly satisfactory. His business has been reorganized as the Morgan Iron Works, two sons being members of the firm.

The charred remains of the unknown man burned in the Boston and Albany wreck at Mittineague have been identified as those of John Jenkins, a young stonecutter of Concord, N. H., who was on his way home from Amsterdam, N. Y., where he had been to set up a monument. He has been married a little over a year, and besides a widow leaves a little boy five months old.

Commenting on the prosperity of the Hartford Post, the Springfield Union has these suggestive comments on the value of advertising as applicable in Palmer as in Hartford:—

> By the way, they are great on advertising down at Hartford, and large as the Post is now with its 56 long columns it is none too large for its advertisers and readers. Somehow a Hartford man never seems to think himself fully equipped for business until he has put from an inch to a column advertisement at work for him, and he is right about it, too. Hartford's wealth is a conspicuous illustration of the value of persistent and liberal advertising.

SLEIGH–RIDES.

The snow well packed, a moonlight night, a fast horse and a stylish cutter, your best girl beside you and away you go! There is lots of fun sleigh-riding, and the young people in this vicinity know how to enjoy it. Good sleighing always attracts parties to and from Palmer, and the past week has been well improved. Last Friday evening a large party from Warren came to the Nassowanno House, where they enjoyed a supper and dance, being handsomely entertained by Landlords Paine and Belcher. Monday night the Weeks House was visited by a small but select party from Springfield, which Landlord Weeks cared for in his usual satisfactory manner. Tuesday was the banner day, however. J. W. Weeks hitched up a four horse team in the afternoon and took a private party of four up to Ware. A small party also went to the Allis House, Wilbraham, in the evening. A gander party of 23 was also made up at the Converse House and went to Warren for a supper, reaching home at 1 a. m. Jim says they had a "lovely time." Last evening a large party from Ware came to the Weeks House for a good time. This evening the employes of the carpet mill go to Brimfield, and another party from Ware will come to the Weeks House, with the back counties yet to hear from. Besides these, every one who could hire or borrow a horse and sleigh has done his best to help pack down the snow and shine up the runners the last few days.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

The first of the farmers' institutes drew out a good number at the Weeks House Tuesday, the question for discussion being "The decline of agriculture in New England; the cause and remedy." J. H. Carpenter of Monson and Dr. Curtis of Globe Village were the principal speakers, both agreeing that one of the greatest reasons was the tendency of farmers' sons to leave the farm and look for employment in the towns and cities. Another reason was the neglect of farms, the habit of using land year after year for pasturage without doing anything to restore it, extracting from the land all the time and giving it nothing in return; the careless way of keeping manure, which instead of being in a cellar where it could be worked over and absorbents carried in, was left exposed to all kinds of weather, and many of its good properties lost. The cheap freight rates from the West—500 per cent lower than 20 years ago—whereby produce could be brought here and sold for less than the home farmers could afford to raise it, was also a discouragement to New England farming. After the papers, a general discussion was entered into, and many points of interest to all farmers brought up. It seemed to be the general conclusion that New England farms, with economy and prudence, could be made to do as well as 50 and 75 years ago, when our fathers used to bring up large families on them and still make money. It was voted to continue the same subject at the next institute, to be held February 14th, and H. N. Noble of Pittsfield, member of the state board of agriculture, will be invited to speak.

The officers were installed by Commander Cary of Post 158, Southbridge. At the close of the installation the boys sat down to a superb oyster supper. A STRIKE AT ELLIS'S MILL.

All of the operatives in the woolen mill of D. W. Ellis & Son struck yesterday because of the discharge of a weaver, who is a Knight of Labor. The trouble has been coming for some time past, because the manufacturers have been fining the weavers fifteen cents for every mis-pick made in the cloth. This the operatives did not like, but it is the first trouble that has arisen between the employer and the employed.

A special meeting of the Knights of Labor was held Wednesday evening to try and devise some way of effecting a settlement, and if that could have been done the operatives would have resumed work yesterday without striking. The trouble is said to have originated with the overseer of the weave room and one of the operators in his charge, the former asserting that fifteen cents would be deducted from the wages received by the overseer for every mis-pick made in the cloth, and after a still further trial he was discharged. The operatives then struck, and say they will not return to work unless the discharged man is taken back.

A. D. Ellis, one of the proprietors of the mill, said that the company was paying its weavers a half cent more per yard than any other manufacturer in town, and that the fine was adopted merely to prohibit imperfections in the cloth. He admitted that the trouble began some time ago, but he had not anticipated a strike, and did not anticipate a long one now that it had come. He said he would not remove the fine, nor concede to the demands of the strikers. If they are ready to go to work Monday morning the machinery will be started, otherwise the mill will be closed for an indefinite period.

On the other hand the strikers say that they will stick to their previous assertions if matters are not adjusted inside of a year, and they are apparently determined. Every department of the factory was closed yesterday except the finishing room, and the operatives employed there were ordered to discontinue to-day. The strikers say that the overseer who discharged the weaver had no cause whatever and that he is an experienced hand in labor difficulties.

A committee has been appointed from the local assembly of the Knights of Labor to call on the manufacturers to-morrow morning, for the purpose of adjusting the grievance if possible.

An anti-polygamy bill has passed the House at Washington which if it becomes a law will be the hardest blow Mormonism has yet received. Its leading provisions are as follows:

It makes the lawful husband or wife of any person prosecuted for bigamy, polygamy or unlawful cohabitation a competent witness against the accused, and provides for the registration of all marriages. It annuls all territorial laws providing for the identification of votes of electors and also all laws conferring on the territorial courts the power to determine divorce cases, and abolishes woman suffrage in the territory of Utah. Penalties are prescribed for unlawful intercourse, and polygamy is defined as a marriage between one person of one sex and more than one person of another sex, and is declared as a felony. The financial corporations known as the Church of Latter Day Saints and the Perpetual Emigration Fund Company are dissolved, and the attorney general is directed to wind them up by process of court, and all laws for the organization of the militia of the territory and the creation of the Nauvoo Legion are annulled. Polygamists are made ineligible to vote, and a test oath is prescribed to all persons desiring to vote. The bill provides for the immediate appointment by the president of all judges of the county and probate courts, and by the governor of all justices of the peace, sheriff, and other county and district officers.

Mr. Dawes is able to stand on his own merits. His advancing years only give him more influence and a better standing in the Senate; his faculties remain unimpaired and his age is less than that of many foreign statesmen who have been in full control of the fortunes of their countries. It is only republics that are ungrateful to their old servants. Mr. Dawes may be said to be the only man in the Senate, with the exception of Senator Morrill, who thoroughly understands the details of the tariff, a subject so dry and so mixed with business intricacies that no young man, with or without ambition, could take it up off-hand and learn it in a year. The tariff is to Massachusetts one of the most important matters that Congress has to handle. As an act of policy, as well as justice, Mr. Dawes should be sent back, and the reasons we have given are very plain and simple.—Worcester Gazette.

JOTTINGS FROM THE HUB.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, JAN. 12th, 1887.

The shadow of a coming event—the election of a United States senator to succeed Senator Dawes—is already plainly felt at the state house. Both sides are confident of success. The friends of Mr. Long said at first that there would be a caucus, that he would be the nominee of the caucus, and that the nominee would be elected by the whole party, regardless of the Democratic votes. About 100 signatures to the call for a caucus were obtained, and there are only 181 Republicans in both brauches—156 in the House and 25 in the Senate. A part of the signatures, however, are those of Dawes men who signed without familiarity with the plans of their leaders, and most of them are opposed to a caucus. The call was started by Mr. Long's friends, without consultation with the Dawes leaders, and to carry with it the weight of the party needed to be indorsed by a large majority of the Republican members. On the part of the Dawes men it is said that over 100 members are against Mr. Long, being either in favor of Mr. Dawes or Gov. Robinson. Ex-Collector Tinker of North Adams, one of Senator Dawes's most influential backers for his long congressional career, has opened Dawes headquarters in the Tremont House. This is the hotel nearest the state house, but it is not frequented by the members nearly as much as the Adams House, or the United States Hotel, or Young's. Within a week the contest will be much more lively than now, but already the Dawes managers predict that the whole matter will be settled on the first day. This will be Jan. 19th, the second Tuesday after the organization of the Legislature, according to the constitution.

The first event of consequence in the contest was the Republican conference of Monday afternoon. On Monday morning an invitation was published by Senator Sleeper of Middlesex to all Republicans to attend the conference to fix the time and place for the caucus which it was proposed to hold. Appended to the invitation was a call for a caucus, signed by 96 Republican members. In all, about 132 went to the conference, the others of the 181 Republicans staying away because they proposed to have no part in either a caucus or any meeting preliminary to one. As soon as the purpose of the conference had been stated, protests were raised by the Dawes men, led by Mr. Kent of Worcester. The ground he took was that it was the intent of the law requiring every man to vote openly in the Legislature, to get his honest opinion, free from any caucus dictation, and that no man could fairly go into a convention with his hands tied by a caucus vote. The position of the Long men, as expressed by Senators Sleeper, Milliken and others, was to the effect that the Republican party alone had the responsibility of the election, and therefore that the party should nominate and elect the senator. When they found that a considerable portion of the party objected to a caucus, they accepted the proposition to make it a conference. The Long men have opened headquarters at room 19 in the Parker House, and say that they have a majority of Bepublicans sure for their candidate, while they expect that Robinson will lead Dawes. On the other hand, the Dawes men say that over 100 of the Republican members are sure anti-Long.

The announcement of the committees in the two branches has made more complaint than is usual in these cases. New men have been promoted over older men who, by parliamentary usage and apparent fitness, were better suited to the places and entitled to them. Thus the session begins in more hard feeling and jealously than usual, and it will take a little while for it to wear off. Members who know the inside of this business can preach their own political sermons, and people who don't know it, but want to find out, had better inquire of their representatives what they know of the management of the matter.

Wednesday was practically the first day for the introduction of new business. Most of the important matters of the session are already in, it would seem. Several town divisions, elevated road petitions, numerous requests for authority to engage in the electric light business on the part of gas companies, many petitions for formation of water companies, the amendments for the prohibition of liquor selling and for the abolition of the poll tax, employers' liability, the revision of the Sunday laws, and many other matters are before the Legislature already. It does not yet appear how much prominence labor matters will have. In one respect the outlook is not for so much political partisanship as has been seen sometimes, for both the presiding officers were elected unanimously, and it is uncertain yet whom the Democrats will support for United States Senator. They may have the balance of power, but four years ago, when they held it, they failed to make any use of it, because they were too slow and stuck to "Sam" Bowerman.

Gov. Ames's message is the subject of favorable comment because of its brevity. He did not succeed in pleasing the temperance people, for they think he should have said something in favor of a prohibitory constitutional amendment, especially since he has been for a long time president of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society.

THE USUAL TREATMENT of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands of despairing patients can testify. On this point a trustworthy medical writer says: "Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but many, if not most, of the remedies in general use by physicians afford but temporary benefit. A cure certainly cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes." Dr. Sweet is Coming.

SEE THE ROUTE.

UNEXAMPLED! UNPRECEDENTED!

Dr. Sweet, the Celebrated Natural Physician and Surgeon of 28 Union Park, Boston, devotes an entire year

TO FREE TREATMENT

Of the Invalid Public of New England in order to more universally introduce the famous "Sweet Method" in the radical cure of obstinate Chronic Diseases.

CONVERSE HOUSE, PALMER, MASS.,

FOR ONE DAY ONLY, TUESDAY, JANUARY 25TH

Everybody invited. No one excluded. Rich or poor, artisan or autocrat, all alike heartily welcome. Invalids desirous of giving something from their abundance can do so but are not obliged to under any circumstance. "Give as it is given unto you." "With such measure ye meet it shall be measured to you again." For years it has been the day dream of Dr. Sweet to amass a sufficient competency to make one tour of the country, entirely free to suffering humanity. THE TIME HAS COME. The Doctor has set aside a fund to defray the expense of the entire tour of not less than one year. Feeling that the "Sweet Method" requires only to be known by tolling millions to be universally adopted by the sick everywhere, Dr. Sweet undertakes the stupendous expense and time in giving to it the widest renown. Now is the time to get a correct idea of just what ails you, without expense. Free and full examinations by Dr. Sweet's natural gifts, without answering a question. Invalids with slender means will thus be enabled to judge of the comparative merits of other systems and the "Sweet Method." Send the news to your invalid friends.

ROUTE.—Palmer, Converse House, Tuesday, Jan. 25; Ware, Hampshire House. Wednesday, Jan. 26; Warren, Warren House, Thursday, 27; East Brookfield, East Brookfield House, Friday, 28; Spencer, Massasoit House, Saturday, 29; Worcester, Monday, for one week, beginning Jan. 31.

Invalids must be on hand early as above dates cannot be changed. Letters addressed as above will reach Dr. Sweet. A limited number of desirable cases will be registered as private patients at reasonable rates. The very worst cases cured by the "Sweet Method" after all fail. Office hours—begin at 8 a. m. and close at 9 p. m. sharp. 3w41

The Outside Dog in the Fight.

You may sing of your dog, your bottom dog,
Or of any dog you please;
I go for the dog, the wise old dog,
That knowingly takes his ease.

And wagging his tail outside the ring,
Keeping always his bone in sight,
Cares not a pin, in his wise old head,
For either dog in the fight.

Not his is the bone they are fighting for,
And, why should my dog sail in,
With nothing to gain but a certain chance
To lose his own precious skin?

There may be a few, perhaps, who fail
To see it quite in this light;
But when the fur flies I had rather be
The outside dog in the fight.

I know there are dogs, most generous dogs,
Who think it quite the thing
To take the part of the bottom dog,
And go yelping into the ring.

I care not a pin what the world may say
In regard to the wrong or the right;
My money goes, as well as my song,
To the dog that keeps out of the fight.

Young woman, listen to this: Tom Moore began to write poems when he was a boy of fourteen, Southey wrote his first verses when he was eleven, Keats was a successful poet at eighteen, Leigh Hunt talked in rhyme at thirteen, Chaucer at twelve and Milton when he was only ten. And where are they now, Ethel? Where are they now? They are dead. Go wash the ink off'n your thumb and help your mother pare the potatoes, Ethel, if you would live long. I'll write the poetry; I don't care to live any longer. [P. S.—In fact I'd rather die than pare the potatoes.]—Brooklyn Eagle.

An English doctor writing about sleep and sleeplessness, observes that the state narcotics produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep, adding: "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night, I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the fact plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night: I cannot obtain it by going to sleep, or I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious, or to slightly paralyze my nerve centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact could be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state that mocks sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree.

Few persons have an idea of the enormous consumption of twine in this country. One of the greatest demands for the article comes from the farmers, who consume thirty-five thousand tons annually upon the self-binding harvesters. Allowing five pounds to the mile, this would be equal to a string long enough to go more than six times around the earth. It takes a length of about three feet of twine to tie a bundle of straw. The farmer sits on his machine drives along through the grain field, and without assistance cuts, bundles and ties twelve acres of wheat grain per day.

A sleeper is one who sleeps. A sleeper is that in which the sleeper sleeps. A sleeper is that on which the sleeper which carries the sleeper while he sleeps runs. Therefore, while the sleeper sleeps in the sleeper the sleeper carries the sleeper over the sleeper under the sleeper until the sleeper which carries the sleeper jumps off the sleeper by striking the sleeper and wakes the sleeper in the sleeper under the sleeper, and there is no longer any sleeper sleeping in the sleeper on the sleeper.—San Diego Union.

The following verdict was recently rendered in Woodland: "We, the jury find the defendents not guilty, with the recommendation that they leave the town within 48 hours."—San Francisco Call.

In New York talk, young ladies who make their debut into society are called 'debbies,' antiquated maids are 'tabbies,' and intermediate one are 'tarriers,' because they tarry unmarried.

"'Tis love that makes the world go 'round." It also makes the young man go 'round—to the house of his girl about seven nights a week.—Norristown Herald.

A female contributor who was called to account by an editor for writing on both sides of her paper, replied "Well, and don't you print on both sides of your's?"

Buffalo is receiving natural gas by pipes from Bradford, Pa., a distance of 93 miles. A revolution in manufactures is anticipated as a result of the enterprise.

The seasick traveler and the wine-bibbing gourmand are equally anxious to reach port and both equally hate water.—Lowell Vox Populi.

The New Year did not have much beauty about it, but then, they say homely babies make handsome adults.—New York World.

WHAT IS SCROFULA?

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, proves itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. Send for book of cures.

They Say if our Beloved Dead.

They say if our beloved dead
Should seek the old familiar place,
Some stranger would be there instead,
And they would find no welcome face.

I cannot tell how it might be
In other homes—but this I know;
Could my lost darling come to me,
That she would never find it so.

Oft-times the flowers have come and gone,
Oft-times the winter winds have blown,
The while her peaceful rest went on,
And I have learned to live alone.

Have slowly learned from day to day
In all my tasks to bear my part;
But whether grave, or whether gay,
I hide her memory in my heart.

Fond, faithful love has blessed my way,
And friends are round me true and tried;
They have their place—but hers to-day
Is empty as the day she died.

How would I spring with bated breath,
And joy too deep for word or sign,
To take my darling home from death,
And once again to call her mine!

I dare not dream—the blissful dream,
It fills my heart with wild unrest;
Where yonder cold white marbles gleam,
She still must slumber—God knows best.

But this I know, that those who say
Our best beloved would find no place,
Have never hungered every day—
Through years and years—for one sweet face.

THE NOTARY'S STORY.

During the Prussian occupation of France I had two officers quartered upon me. They left me alone to my studies and my gloomy thoughts. These thoughts were made gloomier still by my anxiety as to the fate of my younger brother, my only living relative. Ernest was almost a son to me as well as a brother. He had joined one of those irregular bands of franc-tireurs who, to say the truth, were almost as formidable to their countrymen as to their foes. Not a word had come to me from him for many weeks. He had just completed his studies; and was about to become an avocat, and he was already affianced to Mademoiselle Therese, the charming daughter of M. Pottier; and, indeed, the necessary notices had been given at the mairie for their marriage, when the progress of the Prussians necessitated postponement.

One night I was more than ever gloomy, as I sat at the open window looking out.

"Have you all that you want to-night, sir?" said a voice at the door. It was my tall, awkward Susette. I had sent her hours before to the house of my friend Pottier to borrow a book I wanted, but I had forgotten all about her and her mission till she now burst in.

"Nothing! I want nothing—away!" I cried angrily; but the girl continued to advance and my hand was seized and pressed, and then the supposed Susette threw back her hood and revealed the closely cropped head and dark flashing eyes of Ernest—of my brother.

When the first greetings were over—joyous, but subdued by the sense of danger—I began to reproach Ernest for coming to me in this unworthy disguise. Detection would be followed by instant military execution; there would be no hope for one thus almost self-confessed a spy.

He explained in a few words how he came to be placed in this fearful position. Misled by false information, his band had found themselves entangled in the Prussian lines, the greater part had been destroyed, and only himself and five of his companions had, for the time, escaped. Thanks to his knowledge of the country about, and the good will of the peasantry, to whom he was mostly well known, the little band had thus far contrived to elude pursuit. And now they had found refuge in one of those sunken paths that here and there intersect the forest, and close to which, as Ernest well remembered, began the extensive grounds of the villa Pottier, the residence of his fiancee. And then Ernest had volunteered to venture forth from the forest, to obtain much needed provisions and some instructions as to future route. The river lay before them, broad and deep, encumbered with ice, a labyrinth of pools and quicksands, with every boat closely guarded by the Prussians. Behind, a circle of fire hemmed them in.

Then it occurred to me that I had a chart of the river, with the soundings marked, the sandbanks and the various channels. We pored over it earnestly, and Ernest declared that with it he could find his way out of the trap.

"And now, my dear brother," he said, "I must find my way to the Villa Pottier." He concealed the chart on his person, and wrung my hand with emotion.

At this moment the outer door was flung violently open with a great clatter of military accoutrements—my two German officers coming in! Ernest cast a hasty burning glance around, and snatched up a knife that lay on my table, a curious silver-mounted Circassian dagger, which had been given me by my traveled friends, and which I commonly used as a paper-knife.

"Hush," I whispered, "they will not come here; they will go to their rooms."

But to-night, of all nights, my inmates departed from their usual practice. They had been supping with comrades, and were merry and excited as if with wine.

"News for you, worthy sir," cried the elder. "Venture not out to-night; for after the hour just struck all circulation is forbidden except with a special pass. The sentries are doubled, and all are on the alert, for a band of assassins—francs-tireurs, they call themselves—are lurking in the forest close by."

I thought that the glare of Earnest's eyes from under his capeline, hastily pulled over his face as the Prussians entered, would have betrayed him; but our foes were in a happy uncritical frame of mind. They began to laugh at Susette being in my library, when I threatened to report them they apologized, said that they were only joking and begged I would not report their words.

"Well, as you have had your joke," I said, resuming my good humor, "perhaps you will give me your help. Madame Pottier is dangerously ill, and requires my professional assistance to arrange her affairs. It is a matter of urgent necessity. Susette will accompany me to the villa with a lantern. Kindly give me the consigne, that I may pass your sentries safely."

The young men became instantly grave and sobered. "What you ask is impossible. It is forbidden to tell the password; but we are anxious to oblige you. Come, we will ourselves accompany you, and pass you to your destination."

This was a favorable turn of affairs on the whole; for the presence of these two officers would insure us against detentions and awkward examinations.

As we descended the hill we emerged from the fog into a clearer atmosphere, and were soon in sight of the house of M. Pottier. The lower rooms were brilliantly lighted up, and the strains of music could be heard—clarionette and horn—in a gay dancing measure, with the rush of dancers' feet, the murmur of voices, and the sound of light laughter.

"For a sick house a merry one," said one of my companions, dryly; and at that moment I felt confounded, thinking my ruse detected, incredible as it seemed that my friend should be thus dancing and making merry over his country's misfortunes. But as we approached the case became clear. Through the long windows we saw the glitter of splendid uniforms; a number of Prussians of high rank, as I gathered were enjoying a frolic.

To my intense relief, my companions drew off. Here were Herrs and Vons, it seemed, of the blue blood, twice-born Barons, two-sworded Damios; and our humble infantry officers, with the awe of rank inherent in Teutonic blood, feared to intrude upon them. They would wait on the terrace, and begged me to lose no time.

Some one had been waiting for us at the Villa Pottier, for when we reached the side door—the great door had been abandoned to the use of the Prussian inmates—it was opened quickly and noiselessly.

My little fraud was almost justified by facts. The excellent Madame Pottier was actually ill in bed, overcome by the troubles and anxieties of this dreadful time. The suite of rooms occupied by her and her daughter were the only parts of the house absolutely secure against interruption, and at Madame Pottier's bedside we held our family council. Gathered about her couch, in low, sad tones we consulted as to Ernest, who now in his own proper garb stood beside Therese, holding her hand in his. Should we let him go—him upon whom depended the happiness of two families, the very existence of his own.

"Ernest," began Madame Pottier in a low, broken voice, "my child may soon lose the protection of her mother. Remain here and guard her in the troubles and perils that may beset her. Here we are all assembled; your brother will draw out the contract of marriage on the spot; it shall be signed to-night, and to-morrow my Therese will have a protector.

"To-morrow," murmured Ernest; "to marry Therese to-morrow; oh, my dear belle mere, you tempt me sorely. But my comrades who wait in the forest?"

"Remain here, Ernest," I cried; "remain here and live for our sakes. In the name of our dead purents I bid you remain; your comrades shall be warned."

"But I am their leader," he said; "without me they are lost. Tell me, my friends, can any asylum be found for them in this place?"

We looked at each other, but felt that it was impossible to rescue them,

"Then I must go," he cried.

"Speak to him, Therese," I said to the young girl; "remind him of the rights that you have over him. Forbid him for your sake to throw away his life."

I watched her face anxiously, the ingenious face of a maiden who had hardly left her mother's side since infancy, who had known no world except that of the affections, and whose softly dawning passion had been engrossed by one alone. He was all the future to her now, this bright young lover, as her parents had been all her past. Surely, the mother's voice would find an echo in her. She, too, would bid him to stay. How could he resist her voice, the gentle appeal of her tears? for tears ran unheeded down her cheeks, while her soft swimming eyes were fixed upon him. A sob quivered in her slender throat, and her lip trembled like that of a child in deep tribulation. But her voice was clear and firm as she clasped her hands on his shoulder and said, leaning against his breast.

"You must go, dear Ernest. If I have the right over you, as they say, still I must bid you go; it is better to die with honor than to live disgraced."

We all wept like children, for we felt that the girl was right, and yet it seemed to be sending him forth to certain death.

The merry music from below now broke out in wild mocking strains, and the house shook as the waltzers whirled swiftly round. Ah, how our enemies rejoiced, while we gathered stealthily together and in silence and grief devoted our youngest and best to death and sorrowful separation.

That night I lay in bed, but not asleep—with my clothes on, indeed, and a cloak beside me, ready to throw over my shoulders. It was a cruel night—real wolf cold, and I thought bitterly of poor Ernest in his miserable bivouac awaiting the approach of the hour that was to bring release or death. At three o'clock the tide would be at the lowest, and that was the hour fixed for the attempt to steal through the Prussian lines. As the clock struck three I rose and went to my window, an upper window which commanded the river. The fog had cleared away and the stars were shining brightly. The frost had congealed the vapor, and everything was covered with a white shroud. By a soft diffused light the landscape was visible in a faint, filmy way, but I strained my eyes in vain to make out the point where I knew the lighthouse to be. I could see nothing distinctly, although a frozen part of the river showed all ghastly white with a dark channel of deep water winding through it.

Then I heard a shot—a second followed a moment afterward, and then a rattling fusilade all along the line, fearfully distinct in the still night, and rolling back from the hills is thundeorous echoes. A trumpet rang out a call to arms. My inmates were at once on the move, and in a few moments were off at the double to the place of assembly. The town was now astir, every house gave forth its complement of soldiers, and the peaceful inhabitants, aroused from their slumbers, peered cautiously out from behind shutters and blinds at the gathering troops. Something had happened, and hope whispered fondly, something wrong for the Prussians—an evacuation, perhaps, following some crushing disaster. We dreamed of such things then—of armies breaking through our iron bonds, of victorious legions issuing forth from Paris—we dreamed of such things, to awake to realities of fresh woe and disaster.

After a while the excitement subsided, the troops returned to quarters. Also came back my two inmates. They did not go to their room. They stopped at my door and knocked gently. With a swift presentiment of misfortune I opened to them. "What is the matter?" I asked.

"Nothing we hope. A small band of your countrymen tried to break through our lines and cross the river. One was shot by a man of our company, who, hastily searching him, found this map."

The chart was there before me—the chart that I had given my brother the night before! It was all too clear. The poor boy had fallen. I turned away that our enemies might not see my grief.

"A moment; we notice that your name is stamped on one corner. You lent it to a friend, perhaps?"

"To my brother—my only brother—whom you have killed."

The two murmured some sympathetic sentences, with looks that seemed to say, "Do not think us to blame." Then the older went on to say: "The map we must deliver up to our superiors; but the name upon it, leading to the inference that it had been lent by the owner to one of those irregular soldiers—would it not be an act of common prudence to cut it off? See, here is a knife; we will turn away."

No, I would not avail myself of the chance. It was not for me to disown my brother in his hour of death. Let them do what they liked with me. Still, I was touched with the good feeling of these two young fellows, who perhaps risked a good deal to serve me. We even shook hands, a thing I had never thought to do. "They were brave fellows," they whispered; "whatever happens do not blame us. Let us part friends."

I slept after this, quite worn out, a heavy, unrefreshing slumber, broken just at daybreak by a tramping of feet past my window. A detachment of Prussians was hurrying past, and in the midst of a stretcher borne upon men's shoulders, the burden hastily covered with a soldier's great coat, but showing the rigid lines of a corpse. Was it Ernest? I hastily prepared to go out and see.

Just as I was going out there was a loud knocking at the great door. I opened, and there stood a sub-officer, with a guard of soldiers. They hurried me away with scant ceremony, and in spite of my protests in thus being made a victim of barbarous force. People who were going to work looked back at the procession and murmured: "Ah, there goes poor M. Brunet. May the bon Dieu be merciful to him!" just as if it was my funeral. And this I felt it to be.

I was marched into the large hall of the Mairie, and there I found the Mairie, dragged from a sick bed: also the worthy Pottier, and the rest of the Municipal Council, each under an escort of bayonets. It was then, by the way, as we waited in silence and suspense our fate, that I intrusted to my brave friend the secret of the exact spot where my strong box was buried. Soon after a fierce white-headed General appeared, and snapped out a rude address in his native tongue; rude and malevolent we felt it to be, and when softened by translation into our own language it appeared sufficiently truculent. Last night, or early this morning rather, it seemed that a sentry has been killed at his post. The culprit must be found, and handed over to the military authorities with sufficient evidence io justify his heing shot. "Disperse, and use every effort to discover the doer of this dreadful crime, and meet me here at noon with the culprit, or by Him in heaven one of you shall die for it—settle among you which."

This was the conclusion of the address, and we looked at each other in wonder and dismay. Then we were marched out into the ante-room to view the body of the dead sentry. There he lay, stiff and stark, a fine tall soldier, killed by a knife driven into his heart. The knife lay by his side—one of the pieces of evidence—and I recognized it in a moment as my own—the silver mounted dagger that Ernest had appropriated.

Man of peace as I am, a book worm to whom arms are hateful. I felt a fierce throb of joy as I saw this proof of my brother's prowess. He had not died altogether in vain, and it was now for me to justify the deed and take the burden of it.

"Tell your General," I said, turning to the officer who had us in charge, "that I know the man who did the deed; he was my brother, but it was no assassination, but a fair blow struck for the lives of five good Frenchmen. The knife that did the deed is mine, and if another victim is required—"

"No," cried the brave Pottier, "he was mine, my son; it is my right to suffer for him."

"Settle it among you," cried the officer, roughly.

And we were thrust into the street with orders to come back at noon precisely. Pottier walked back with me to my house. There we saw two female figures, in deep mourning, and closely veiled, waiting for us in the passage. Madame Pottier had risen from a bed of sickness to bring her daughter down to visit the body of her fiance, which, owing to the kindness of my German friends, had been brought to my house.

"You will be glad to hear, dear brother," whispered Therese, who bore up with fortitude quite marvelous in one so young, "that poor Ernest did not sacrifice himself in vain. The five others got safely across the river, and were seen to plunge into the forest beyond."

They had disposed the glorious tricolor about the body, and some one had laid a sprig of laurel across the breast. I went reverently to uncover the face of the corpse. It was not Ernest's—the face of a brave man sternly compressed, and yet composed, in death, but not Ernest's.

I turned to Therese, who had followed me into the darkened room. "It is not he! He lives; he has escaped!"

Therese fell fainting into my arms. I gave her to her mother's care and left the house. My task seemed easy now; I could picture to myself the future. Ernest and his wife—their children clustered about them, as he tells them the story of the good old uncle who was killed by the Prussians. The sacrifice was not so hard after all; but I thought a little regretfully of the unfinished monograph—how it would be, one day, swept up among the rubbish of my library, and consigned to perdition. And I wandered out to my favorite spot the Villa Pottier, where a sweet panorama of hills and broad plains and winding river gleamed softly under a ray of winter sunshine. Farewell to all this!

At noon I presented myself at the Mairie, passed through a file of soldiers to the grand salon and found that my colleagues of the Municipal Council—all except Pottier—were already assembled. My resolution to offer myself as a victim, if one were demanded, was generally applauded, and a resolution accepting it was passesd without a dissenting voice. It was promised that my name should be inscribed on the records of the town as one of its noblest citizens. All very well, no doubt in its way.

There was a general crash of arms as the General entered the salon, accompanied by an officer whom I recognized as the Prince L. Pottier, at the same moment, slipped in behind us, and gave my arm a reassuring squeeze.

There was no victim to be offered up, after all. Pottier had appealed to his distinguished guest, Prince L., telling him the whole affair, and the Prince had spoken to the General, and the latter announced in somewhat surly, dissappointed accents: "That the penalty of death to a Municipal Councilor was commuted into a fine on the Commune of twenty-five thousand francs."

Soon after we had news of the armistice, and in a little while Ernest was once more among us. Lucky fellow, to have a Therese to welcome him home and fete him as the greatist hero of the war! They were married soon after, and removed to Paris, where Ernest is now practicing at the bar. It seems that it was not Earnest himself who killed the sentry, but the brave fellow who was shot, to whom Ernest intrusted the chart and the knife. Ernest would have done the same, he says, had he been in the way of it; but I think Therese is rather glad that it was not so. I hope I shall never see my two German friends again, although we parted on excellent terms.

CABLE TELEGRAPHY OF TO-DAY.

The New York merchant to-day, says a telegrapher reported in the New York Tribune, does not fully appreciate the wonderful system of submarine intercommunication which is always at his service; but old city men know well enough the annoyance and losses on European and Asiastic business caused through native operators when messages had to be handed from one government to another before they reached their destination. Twenty years ago eight days' delay on Indian messages was quite common; telegrams that had to pass through Turkey were thrust aside at Constantinople until the turbaned operators had cleared their lines, the work of mutilation often cost the merchant his message and the price of a "repeat" when the receiver was unable to translate the mangled English delivered to him in Bombay or Calcutta. Now all this is changed. British and American operators are to be found in all parts of the globe, much to the surprise of outsiders, who wonder why natives cannot be trained to take charge of cable circuits. Our operators proceed to foreign stations and in the most unhealthy climates manfully do their duty. Mutilated messages are no longer common, and the merchants of this country reap the benefit. The other day I was asked why half-breed Spaniards could not be trained to take appointments at such places as Vera Cruz and Panama, where Anglo-Saxons cannot live. The real Spaniard does not make a model operator. What then the Mexican operator would be like I will not venture to suggest. I have heard on good authority that it is nothing unusual for the Spanish operator to give "M. A." [wait] while he saunters to a neighboring restaurant to indulge in a cigarette. It is no wonder that cable companies are glad to secure English and American operators, for they seldom forsake their posts while they have a leg to stand on. When "Iroquois" won the Derby the news was on the streets here 19 seconds after he passed under the wire, and before they knew it in London. Special arrangements were made of course, and all other business laid aside, and the time has never been beaten. Down on the stock exchange messages are sent and the answer received from the London stock board every day inside of three minutes, without exciting comment; and if five minutes elapse all manner of maledictions are invoked upon the head of the blameless operator.

Dudes are in fashion now temporarily. Evergreen, you know.—Somerville Journal.

Brunettes not Coquettes.

They say the brunettes are arch coquettes,
That they break the hearts that love them,
But that eyes of blue are tender and true
As the sky that bends above them,

Ah! but you will find that love is color blind,
And he comes with as little warning
To hearts that lie back of eyes that are black,
As of those that are as blue as the morning.

For he comes and goes as the free wind blows,
That asks not as it passes
If it touches the head of the roses red,
Or violets down in the grasses.

So all the coquettes are not the brunettes,
Nor the maidens with golden tresses;
They are those unto whom love has never come
With his kisses and fond caresses.

A WARNING.

One of the familar effects of ether is to make the patient talk ramblingly of whatever may be passing in the mind. Charlie Smith has a dear little girl that he thinks the world of, and rumor hath it that the two will shortly be made one. Charlie had an errand to perform on Dorrance street Wednesday, about 10 o'clock, and while coming down Westminster street who should he meet but Nellie. The poor little thing cut an awful appearance though, and the woe-begone, tear-stained face peeping out from the mufflers struck terror to his heart. She had been up most all night with a terrible toothache, and wouldn't Charlie go to the dentist with her? Of course he would and he did. She preferred ether to gas, and the accommodating dentist saturated a cloth with the stuff and held it under the little red nose. She gasped some, but soon settled into desuetude, her ruby lips parted and she began right off prattling away like a sleeping baby. Charley was standing just beside the chair when she murmured; "Oh! Charlie, don't." Charlie looked up at the dentist, down at himself and—"mother will see you, Charlie, please don't." The dentist smiled grimly, Charlie's eyes began to bulge, and—"Charlie, you kissed my ear that time," murmured the sleeping maiden, and—" The rest was lost on Charlie, who had grabbed his hat and started down the stairs two steps at a time. Charlie had to pluck up a great deal of courage to present himself at Nellie's house that night and explain his sudden departure, and money won't induce him to pass by that dentist's shop.—"City Snippet" in Providence Journal.

HOW COLUMBUS FOUND AMERICA.

The following story comes from a school in the Midlands. The master told the boys of the third class to write a short essay on Coloumbus. The following was sent up by an ambitious essayist:

"Clumbus was a man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The King of Spain said to Clumbus:

" 'Can you discover America?'

" 'Yes,' said Clumbus, 'if you will give me a ship.'

" So he had a ship, and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarrelled, and said they believed there was no such place. But, after many days the pilot came to him and said:

" 'Clumbus, I see land.'

" 'Then that is America," said Clumbus.

" When the ship got near, the land was full of black men. Clumbus said:

" 'Is this America?'

" 'Yes it is,' said they. Then Clumbus said:

" 'I suppose you are the niggers?'

" 'Yes,' they said, 'we are.' The Chief said:

" 'I suppose you are Clumbus?'

" 'You are right,' said he.

"Then the Chief turned to his men and said:

" 'There is no help for it; we are discovered at last.' "—London Standard.

Archibald Lesser, who went to the army during the rebellion, from Syracuse, New York, and was last heard from as one of Sherman's soldiers marching to the sea, joined his family again on Christmas eve at Elizabeth, New Jersey. He has had a varied experience. First he was wounded, then feil into the hands of the enemy, had brain fever, recovered with memory all gone, wandered about as a lunatic, went to Texas, joined the cowboys, was shot and scalped by Indians and recovered with memory restored. Then he recollected that he had left a wife and children, and four months ago he started east to find them. He could discover no trace of his family, however, until he accidentally met a man from Elizabeth in a saloon in Syracuse who knew them. His children are grown up, but his wife had not married again during his long absence. She failed to recognize him at first, but when he related incidents in their courtship she concluded that he was in truth her long lost husband, and flung herself into his arms. Here is a story which fiction could not very well out do.

An atom and a molecule were taken a drive one afternoon in the pænumbra of the Kosmos. "Are you going to the Terrestrial ball this evening?" inquired the atom of his pretty companion.

"No," replied the latter, shyly, "I am not expected."

"Is your name down on the material list?"

"No," sobbed the molecule, "it's only down on the Nihil list."

"Then I must conclude," sighed the disappointed atom, "that I shall not meet you at the Small and Early Hypodermic Injections?" An asteroid, who was sitting on the railing of Sceptizism as they passed, cast a doubt upon them. The result was that their motor effected an escapement, and, kicking over the traces of the Azoic period, blew up. They were thrown across the theory of Assymptotes into the great beyond, where they died.

This teaches us how to account for the spots on the sun.—Harvard Lampoon.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, 1887.

SHERIFF BROOKS weakens his administration greatly when he puts politics ahead of capacity and fitness in the appointment of his deputies.

WORCESTER is to be congratulated on her good fortune in having a noble university in prospect, founded by Jonas G. Clark, who has endowed it with a million dollars.

BISMARCK'S army bill was defeated last Friday, and the Reichstag was at once dissolved. An election will be held February 21, and the canvass will be an exciting one.

GENIAL John D. Long's ambition for the highest seat in the synagogue has been gently but effectually set down on for the present. Now if he will cultivate his legislative ability rather than office-seeking proclivities he may be called up higher by the people in due time.

THE Grant monument fund receives $982.50 from Mrs. Grant, this being the amount she has received from the goverment for balance due Gen. Grant, which she feels is too sacred for use in any other way than as an offering toward her husband's monument.

FAXON, the irrepressible represser of intemperance, is trying now to repress the druggists' drams, and offers to furnish all sick people in Quincy whatever liquor is necessary for them free of charge, upon physicians' prescriptions. If his scheme works there will be a terrible pressure upon the physicians in that town, and Faxon will find the prescription business wonderfully lively, we suspect. His idea isn't a bad one, however.

A MASS of rock estimated to measure 223,000 cubic yards fell from the brink of the Horsehoe Falls at Niagara the other day. The edge of the falls has receded a distance of 300 feet since 1842, it is claimed, and the rate of recession is increasing. But even at this rate it will be some centuries before the brink will get up to Buffalo, and before that time some enterprising Yankee of the future may be able to give the brink a coating of indestructible material which will prevent further disintegration.

CATHOLIC circles in New York are greatly stirred over the removal of Rev. Dr. McGlynn from the pastorate of St. Stephen's, because of his sympathy with the Henry George movement, and his parishioners have openly rebelled against his successor. Largely attended meetings have been held to demand the reinstatement of their beloved pastor, who is prostrated by the blow. The doctor has displayed too much of the spirit of American independence to suit Rome, and there is no probability of his being reinstated. The infallible pope is not in the habit of yielding to insubordination.

IT has remained for Chicago to produce the most extreme fanatics of various sorts. After the anarchists here comes a young woman of good family, a graduate of Vassar, and an heiress, who has fallen in love with Spies, one of the anarchists under sentence of death, and is ready to marry him. More remarkable still, her parents sanction her desire. Fortunately the sheriff has enough sense to put a stop to her folly by forbidding her further visits to the jail, and Miss Nina Van Zandt will have opportunity to repent her deplorable infatuation while attempting to mollify the anger of the aunt whose property she is to inherit.

OUR Boston correspondent gives the story of the proceedings by which Senator Dawes was reëlected Wednesday, and the state is to be congratulated on the result. The Democrats displayed uncommon good judgment in bringing the matter to a prompt decision by going over bodily to Senator Dawes after their complimentary vote for Gen. Collins, but the Long men are very sore over the result, and talk foolishly of all sorts of bargains between the Dawes leaders and the Democrats. They need not complain, however, for on the final vote Mr. Dawes had a clear majority of the Republican votes, and there was no possible chance for their favorite. The Long men have bragged outrageously all through the canvass, and the result ought to make them blush over their false assertions. The people are pleased and satisfied with the return of Mr. Dawes. Now let the politicians quiet down.

If when shoveling the snow from his sidewalk the goodman of the house would also make a path from the walk into the street, for the benefit of the butcher, the grocer, etc., he would be highly esteemed by those worthies.

The Redmund-Barry company presented "Rene" at the rink Wednesday evening to a good sized audience. The company showed well in the several parts, as it always does, and the play was well put on, in spite of the handicap that was placed upon them by the small stage and lack of conveniences.

After paying for the damage done to sheep, the balance of the dog fund is paid back to the several towns, apportioned by the amount paid in. The towns in this vicinity receive a rebate as follows: Palmer, $343; Brimfield, $96; Hampden, $106; Holland, $32; Ludlow, $194; Monson, $355; Wales, $50; Wilbraham, $115.

When the mail bags were thrown off the 1.13 New York express at this station yesterday afternoon, the one for the Palmer and New London route struck a post and bounded back under the wheels of the car, where it was badly cut up and a large share of its contents ruined, letters being found scattered all along through the yard, cut and torn in pieces.

The sleigh-ride party which went to Brimfield Tuesday evening from the carpet mill must have enjoyed the trip hugely, and been anxious for a ride on runners. With a strong wind and the mercury below zero, it took about four hours to make the trip over, and by starting home at 3 a. m., they reached Palmer just in time to get to work in the morning.

W. H. H. Murray gave his reading, "How John Norton, the trapper, kept his Christmas," at St. Paul's church last evening. Mr. Murray is a fine elocutionist, and rendered the piece in a manner which showed that he was fully master of it. The house was filled, and the audience was very attentive. The council has ordered a supply of the story in book form, and copies can be obtained of C. E. Fish or at the store of H. P. Longley.

The present winter is a rougher one than Massachusetts has seen for some years. The snow is fully two feet deep, and badly drifted by Tuesday's wind. There is too much snow for first-class sleighing, and in some of the back districts the roads are almost impassible. The large amount of snow on the roofs is doing much damage also, for when a thaw comes the water sets back in the corners and angles, and then freezing, forces its way inside the building.

There is considerable rivalry between Monson and Palmer horsemen, but the Palmer steppers have always managed to hold their own. One of Monson's horsemen recently imported a stepper for the purpose of beating anything owned in Palmer, and last week challenged Palmer horses to a trial of speed on the winter course here. Only two responded, but both trotted right away from the Monson horse. It was really too bad, after being brought all the way from Maine, to get "left" the first heat.

Last Saturday Edward Lynch was before the district court for drunkenness, and paid $6.33. Monday Patrick Curtin of Monson was tried for illegal selling of liquor to Ellen Looney, but when Ellen came to testify she forgot who she had bought the whisky of; had never seen the person before or since, and did not see him in the court room, so Curtin was discharged. Yesterday morning John Gilligan and Charles McCarty, for running away when ordered to work for their supper, lodging and breakfast, were sent up for a season.

The strike of coal handlers has cut short the supply of that article, and unless some can be got through before long a famine in that line of fuel is threatened. The supply in the yards of J. F. Holbrook has been drawn heavily upon, until he has scarcely any left. But he has the promise of a boat load the first of next week, and expects to be able to supply customers at but a slight advance. Until then he is delivering it in 500 pound lots. The surrounding territory is no better off than Palmer. Ware, Thorndike, Three Rivers, Bondsville, Belchertown, Amherst, Monson, Wales, Brimfield and other towns are all out, and attempt to get along with what little can be drawn from Palmer.

THE POST OFFICE MUDDLE.

The postmaster question grows more interesting and mysterious as the time slips by and no appointment is made. One idea is that no appointment will be made until after Congress adjourns; in that case the lucky man would hold the place until the next session could act on his nomination. If then rejected he would have had it a while, any way. Another supposition is that with the influences brought to bear for each of the three candidates whose petitions are now in, the president will not appoint either one, but will pick a new man, a "dark horse" yet unmentioned. In this connection are mentioned John L. Wilder, foreman of the JOURNAL office, and T. J. Sullivan, the boot and shoe dealer, and both are working quietly with that end in view. Either one would make a good official. Postmaster Knox is also urged by some of his friends, Democrats as well as Republicans, to apply for a reappointment, they claiming that the delay in appointing his successor is an indication much in his favor. Another candidate appeared yesterday in the shape of Barney Galleher, of South Main street, and a petition for him is going the rounds. The one for C. A. Brown was very generally signed in this village, and persons whose names are not on some of the various petitions are getting scarce. Some names are on more than one, and one man in town has signed every one presented him. Another man is said to have written a letter for every candidate who has asked him to. To make it more interesting, it is reported one man has had his papers returned to him, with word that it is of no use for him to apply.

DEATH OF R. L. GODDARD.

The ranks of our well-known business men have again been depleted by the sudden death of Mr. R. L. Goddard last Saturday morning of heart disease. He retired Friday night apparently as well as usual, but about 2.30 a. m. Mrs. Goddard was awakened by a movement of his arms, and he died almost immediately. Mr. Goddard came to this town from Fitchburg about fifteen years ago and engaged in the manufacture of straw goods at the brick factory on Commercial street, now occupied by the Betts Fencing Company. This business was at one time the chief industry of this place, and was so successfully conducted that Mr. Goddard acquired a very handsome fortune, and was thus enabled to contribute liberally toward the prosperity of our village. He erected a costly residence on Main street which he occupied until a short time previous to his death. He was largely interested in the organization of the Palmer Wire Goods Co. and the Palmer Wire Co., being a director in both organizations, and for a time was treasurer of the Wire Goods Co. These investments, as well as some others made by Mr. Goddard later in life, proved unfortunate, and through them he sustained some very serious losses. He was closely identified with both our banks, being a trustee of the savings bank, and until last summer a director of the national bank, and before he was overtaken by financial reverses was regarded as one of our most substantial and enterprising business men. His social qualities rendered him extremely popular, and his high standing both as a citizen and man secured for him a full measure of the public esteem. Mr. Goddard had buried two children since coming to Palmer, and his widow, who alone survives him, has the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community. His funeral was largely attended Tuesday afternoon at his late residence on Squier street, Rev. Mr. Betts of the Universalist church officiating, and his remains were taken to Fitchburg for burial Wednesday.

The meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union held Thursday last at the residence of Mr. O. B. He always manifested a deep interest in the wellfare of his employes, and will be much missed by them.

Signor De Almo gave notice of an entertainment of magic, ventriloquism, etc., at the town hall for Tuesday evening, but on account of the storm it was postponed to Thursday evening.

Tuesday evening the Wales stage was unable to get through on account of the roads being blocked up by snow, and put up for the night about a mile south of Brimfield center, finishing the trip Wednesday morning, and resuming regular trips yesterday morning.

The past week has been prolific in plans and engagements for sleighing parties, which often have been postponed or given up on account of the storms or severe cold weather. Notwithstanding all this, the Brimfield Hotel Jan. 13th had a party of 16 couples from Monson; Jan 15th, another party of 25 couples from Monson; Jan. 18th, 13 couples from Palmer; Jan. 19th, 20 couples from Fiskdale. Mrs. Wm. Braman started to go to the house of Charles Gale Tuesday evening for assistance for her husband, who had been taken suddenly ill. When within a few rods of Mr. Gale's house she got into the snow and was unable to extricate herself. Tuesday evening one of our citizens discovered thieves at his clothes line, and having missed things in this way before, made a search at a certain house afterward, with no success. He finally became convinced of his error, and has handsomely apologized.

For six weeks previous to Tuesday there has been no fire in the waiting room of the New London Northern road, although the agent has done his best to secure a new stove in place of the old broken one. Passengers who take trains at this station will gratefully welcome the change in affairs.

And still the howl is about the post office, and many are the maledictions heaped upon the head of the new postmaster. The call boxes, although in position and some of them rented, are not made use of, the public is kept waiting for its mail much longer than it should or has patience for, and people generally wonder how much longer they must endure.

HAMPDEN.

Mathias Casey of Hampden is in the batch of appointments for deputy sheriff. It is said he is appointed in the interest of Springfield parties.

Miss Rosa Thresher attended a wedding at Hazardville, Ct., recently, and now has the measles in consequence, and the rest of the family are expected to follow suit.

The funeral of Mrs. William R. Sessions was held on the 13th from her late home. Rev. M. A. Howard of Wilbraham and Rev. E. A. Chase of Hampden officiated. The concourse of people present from this and many surrounding towns testified to the respect in which the deceased and her husband were held. Nearly fifty teams followed the remains to the grave. The operatives in the Lacowsic mill disgraced themselves by pounding on the windows or opening the windows and making sport as the procession passed.

A most disgraceful family quarrel is going on at one end of the town. An old man gave his youngest son a verbal lease of the home farm for a year beginning last April, and now with the help of an older son is trying to oust him. Report says they have broken the door of the house and that a constable now guards it. The younger son has boarded cattle for a neighbor who has thus been drawn into the quarrel, and it is said that he has been knocked down and a revolver drawn on him. The public generally sides with the youngest son.

The evening school had its first regular session last evening, and bids fair to be a success. The regular branches with the addition of bookkeeping, make up an excellent course and costs but little.

The Redmond-Barry Combination disappointed a large audience that patiently awaited them Tuesday evening. The manager claimed tremendous snow blockades between Orange and this village, but the papers evidently failed to hear of them. A large number from Duckville and Skeeterville turned around disgusted. The local managers were in no way responsible, and considerable out of pocket.

The condition of affairs at the mill of D. W. Ellis & Son remains unchanged. The finishing room, the last department of the mill to close, was shut down Wednesday night. Some of the machinery has been shipped away to be repaired. A committee of the strikers was appointed to confer with the manufacturers and see what could be done in the way of a settlement, but have failed to connect, and so both sides are resting on their oars, doing nothing. The strikers are firm in their demands, and say that they will stay out all winter if need be, while the manufacturers say they will not yield an inch, and are in no hurry to start their mills.

The mammoth squash of Norcross Bros. was opened according to programme Saturday noon. G. L. Jenks and G. L. Keeney were a committee to count the seeds, and certified the correct number to be 316. W. M. Peck guessed the exact number, and was awarded the chandelier. J. T. Leonard thought 315 were enough seeds for any squash to have, and so tied for the office clock with C. A. Peck and Mrs. S. S. Gage, who thought 317 was always a lucky number. J. P. Herlihy said 318, and being the only one of like opinion, took a half dozen silver knives. Mrs. G. E. Tucker, Mrs. J. E. Hills and George Darling were represented by the number 320, and one of them will get a waterproof. The guesses varied from 25 to 4387.

Mrs. Mary A. Smith of this town, who has so recently passed away, was the eldest of the seven children of Capt. Sylvester and Laura A. Parks. She was born in Russell, but spent most of her earlier years in Palmer. She was married to John W. Smith, also of Palmer, Sept. 9th, 1834. After brief residences in Palmer and Wilbraham, Mr. and Mrs. Smith removed to Monson, their principal object being to avail themselves of the educational advantages afforded by the academy for their children. In the community in which her lot fell Mrs. Smith labored for the best interests of church, school and home. In January, 1885, while with her daughter, Mrs. Potroin of Austin, Ill., paralysis came upon her. She was spared to be brought to her home, where she had lived for forty years, in October, 1885. Since that time it has been the privilege of her friends to care for her. Her death is the first in the family of seven. She survived her husband nearly fourteen years, and will long be missed by those who knew and loved her.

The meeting endorsed the suggestions of the selectmen and road commissions that a change should be made in the highway at Gibbs' Crossing, so as to carry the highway under both railroads; also sustaining the suggestions of the boards in reference to the crossings at Bowdoin's, Cummings', Anson Bassett's and Gilbertville; also that the Central should carry its track northerly of present location where it crosses the West Warren road, so as not to disturb the present grade of highway; also that the boards should use their best efforts not to have grade crossings at the depot unless protected by gates properly tended.

A vessel with 100,000 pounds of giant powder on board went ashore near San Francisco, opposite the famous Cliff House, last Saturday, and, striking on the rocks, the powder exploded with terrific force, wrecking property in the vicinity and injuring three of the life-saving crew in their house on the shore. The crew escaped before the explosion.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, JAN. 19th, 1887.

The second formal event in the contest for senator was Thursday afternoon, when the conference was held which was voted on Monday. As soon as it was called to order, Senator Morse of Norfolk offered a motion for an informal ballot for senator, as an expression of opinion, but not to be binding. This was the bone of contention for the whole session. The Dawes men opposed it, saying that the meeting was for a comparison of views and not at all for a vote. The Long men insisted that their motion was perfectly fair, and that an expression of the preference of a majority could be secured in no other way. Senator Kimball of Suffolk, a representative of the Long men, produced three ballots exactly alike, except the names on them, saying that men could vote and not let it be known who they voted for, and asked to have a vote taken that way. The Dawes men replied that when they wanted to vote they would provide their own ballotts and vote face up. Then the Long men said that if a vote should show that Dawes led Long, Long would withdraw and asked the Dawes men to make the same promise for him. But the reply was that there would be time enough for withdrawal after the first vote in the Legislature, and that the constituents of the members were entitled to be heard on the first vote. All this talk was in much excitement and confusion, and finally a motion to adjourn without day was carried without a vote being taken. After the conference was over the Dawes men were happy, because the Long men had failed to force a vote. The Robinson men, too, felt that their candidate stood a first-rate chance.

On Tuesday came the first vote for senator. Each branch voted separately, as the United States statutes for senatorial election prescribe, and only one vote was taken in each branch. The Democrats had held a conference Monday afternoon and decided to cast a complimentary vote for Patrick A. Collins. So the vote was as follows in the Senate, Tuesday:

Patrick A. Collins	14
John D. Long	12
Henry L. Dawes	11
George D. Robinson	2

One Democrat, Senator Howard of Bristol, was absent. In the House, one Democrat, Mr. Gamwell of Pittsfield, voted for John E. Russell. Otherwise they voted on party lines for the regular candidate. The vote was:

Henry L. Dawes	65
George D. Robinson	44
John D. Long	41
John E. Russell	1

Five were absent in the House. So there was no choice, and on Wednesday the two branches met in joint convention promptly at 12 o'clock. President Boardman of the Senate was in the chair. The clerks of the two branches read the results of Tuesday's voting and it appeared that there was no choice. So the roll was called. The Democrats stuck to Collins. The Republicans voted the same as on Tuesday, except that Robinson gained three from Long, two from Dawes and one from Collins, and Dawes gained one from Robinson and one from Collins. Just as soon as the last name was called the Democrats were on their feet addressing the chair. Mr. Symonds of Salem, a Robinson leader, was also up. It appeared that the Democrats had determined to change to Dawes on this ballot, for fear that the Republicans would elect him on the next and thus prevent them from having a share in it. Though they hoped to keep it secret, it was known at once, and information given to some of the Long and Robinson men what to expect. It was Mr. Symonds's intention to carry the Robinson vote to Dawes if possible. But Senator Alger of Middlesex, a Democrat, was recognized first and changed from Collins to Dawes. Mr. Symonds came next, going from Robinson to Dawes. Then came a lot of Democrats, going from Collins to Dawes. The next Republican to change was Senator Reed of Bristol, from Long to Robinson. Other Long men went to Robinson and the last feature of the change was the transfer of a lot of Long and Robinson men to Dawes. When the first call was finished it stood Dawes, 76; Long, 53; Robinson, 53; Collins, 92; John E. Russell, 1. When the official vote was announced, it was:

Whole number	276
Necessary for a choice	139
John E. Russell	1
Patrick A. Collins	11
John D. Long	26
George D. Robinson	57
Henry L. Dawes	181

Opinions differ as to the effect of the struggle upon the Republican party. The soundest I have found is to the effect that it will harmonize the party better than the election of either of the other candidates could, for Messrs. Long and Lodge are both Republicans and will want a reëlection to Congress in the fall of 1886. Consequently, they will not, nor their friends, be disposed to seek any revenge for their defeat, for it would inevitably react against them.

In the Senate, Thursday, Senator Phillips of Hampden offered an order regarding the suppression of liquor clubs, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union presented a petition for a prohibitory constitutional amendment. In the House an order was introduced in regard to preventing employers from restraining their employes from performing duties in the militia. A bill was also proposed making a material modification of the trustee process.

Friday's session of the Legislature was not eventful, because it is too early for committee reports to be expected. One of the important measures introduced was a bill on leave by Mr. Quincy of Quincy to provide a method of secret voting at all public elections. The present law permits the use of sealed envelopes, but his bill makes the use of such envelopes compulsory. It provides in detail the machinery of the law, and by heavy penalties seeks to prevent fraud on the part of the voter or of the election officer.

Representative Moseley of Newburyport introduced a proposition to abate a part of the tax of all corporations and companies which divide their profits with their employes. A few petitions were presented for an increase of salary.

The trouble in the liquor law committee by which it was a tie—five for prohibition and five against it—has been removed by taking off Mr. Keane of Holyoke, leaving the committee with a majority of prohibitionists. Petitions have begun to come in for a prohibitory constitutional amendment.

Our Book Table.

The Delineator for February is at hand in good season with its pretty costumes for all—even the dolls. There are instructions in fancy work, with hints and suggestions for the coming season, as well as several good papers on practical matters, noticably one on the purchase and preservation of bed and table linen. It is a good number of a good family magazine.

The Colored Plate in the New Year's Number of THE ART AMATEUR, "Marguerites," is a charming rendering, by Edith Scannell, of the always popular theme—a lovely child with daises. The number also gives a beautiful decorative head, by Ellen Welby; a pleasing design of children dancing, for a piano front; one of holly for wood-carving, two for chasuble ornamentation, six for doylies, and two for china painting (black alder-berries and leaves for a jar and chrysanthemums for a pane), besides a large decorative study of ivy, and a page of monograms. There is a useful article on landscape painting; the series on fruit painting in oils is continued, and a new series on portrait painting in the same series is begun, together with one on china painting. Another new feature is "Talks with Artists," the first of which, on "The Life Class," should be read by every ambitious student. The exhibitions of the National Academy and the American Art Association receive due notice and there is an interesting illustrated account of Paul Baudry, the eminent French decorative artist. The suggestive articles on the simple decoration of unadorned city apartments are continued, and the needlework department is richly filled, church vestments receiving particular attention. It is quite evident from this January number that THE ART AMATEUR for 1887 will be more than ever indispensible to all practical art lovers and art students. Price 35 cts. $4 a year. MONTAGUE MARKS, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

The February Harper's opens with an entertaining article on that quaint and charming region in the Bayou Teche country of Southern Louisiana, known as "The Acadian Land," where Evangeline's people, the Acadians of Nova Scotia, settled, upon their banishment from the British province at the beginning of the last century. The peculiarities of this strange little world, which still retains secluded independence, its simple habits, and its curious French patois, are interestingly described by Charles Dudley Warner as he recently witnessed them, and the picturesque aspects of the section are beautifully drawn by his fellow-traveller, Mr. William Hamilton Gibson. Joe Jefferson's charming island home, famous for its orange plantation, is in this section, and after reading of its attractions one is surprised, not that the actor spends most of his time there in quiet enjoyment of his artistic and theatrical studies, but that he does not become so infatuated with his isolated paradise as, like the lotos-eaters, to forget the remainder of creation. In fact, this is known to have very nearly occurred in the case of some of his guests, who had become so enamored of his luxurious retreat that they experienced the struggles of Ulysses in escaping from the fascinating spot. This, however, was probably due in part to the delightful hospitality of the genial Rip Van Winkle. Petite Anse Island, with its wonderful salt-mines, adjoins Jefferson Island. It is refreshing to be introduced to such a primitive people as are these Acadians, and this article, with that on "New Orleans," in the January number, forms a most interesting opening of the series of Southern papers which is promised as a special feature of the year's programme in Harper's Magazine.

A Baltimore negro who emigrated to Liberia years ago ordered a quantity of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup stating that he didn't like to be without it.

THE USUAL TREATMENT of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands of despairing patients can testify. On this point a trustworthy medical writer says: "Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but many, if not most, of the remedies in general use by physicians afford but temporary benefit. A cure certainly cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes." Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy which combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient. 2w42

Dr. Sweet is Coming.
SEE THE ROUTE.
UNEXAMPLED! UNPRECEDENTED!

Dr. Sweet, the Celebrated Natural Physician and Surgeon of 28 Union Park, Boston, devotes an entire year

TO FREE TREATMENT

Of the Invalid Public of New England in order to more universally introduce the famous "Sweet Method" in the radical cure of obstinate Chronic Diseases.

CONVERSE HOUSE, PALMER, MASS.,
FOR ONE DAY ONLY, TUESDAY, JANUARY 25TH

Everybody invited. No one excluded. Rich or poor, artisan or autocrat, all alike heartily welcome. Invalids desirous of giving something from their abundance can do so but are not obliged to under any circumstance. "Give as it is given unto you." "With such measure ye meet it shall be measured to you again." For years it has been the day dream of Dr. Sweet to amass a sufficient competency to make one tour of the country, entirely free to suffering humanity. THE TIME HAS COME. The Doctor has set aside a fund to defray the expense of the entire tour of not less than one year. Feeling that the "Sweet Method" requires only to be known by toiling millions to be universally adopted by the sick everywhere, Dr. Sweet undertakes the stupendous expense and time in giving to it the widest renown. Now is the time to get a correct idea of just what ails you, without expense. Free and full examinations by Dr. Sweet's natural gifts, without answering a question. Invalids with slender means will not be enabled to judge of the comparative merits of other systems and the "Sweet Method." Send the news to your invalid friends.

ROUTE.—Palmer, Converse House, Tuesday, Jan. 25; Ware, Hampshire House, Wednesday, Jan. 26; Warren, Warren House, Thursday, 27; East Brookfield, East Brookfield House, Friday, 28; Spencer, Massasoit House, Saturday, 29; Worcester, Monday, for one week, beginning Jan. 31.

Invalids must be on hand early as above dates cannot be changed. Letters addressed as above will reach Dr. Sweet. A limited number of desirable cases will be registered as private patients at reasonable rates. The very worst cases cured by the "Sweet Method" after all fail. Office hours—begin at 8 a. m. and close at 9 p. m. sharp. 3w41

Ka-foozle-um.

In ancient days there lived a Turk,
A horrid beast within the East,
Who did the prophet's holy work,
As Baba of Jerusalem.
He had a daughter, sweet and smirk,
Complexion fair, and dark blue hair,
With naught about her like a Turk,
Except her name—Ka-foozle-um.

A youth resided near to she;
His name was Sam—a perfect lamb—
Who was of ancient pedigree,
And came from old Mathusalem.
He drove a trade, and prospered well,
In skins of cats and ancient hats,
And ringing at the Baba's bell,
He saw and loved Ka-foozle-um.

If Sam had been a muzzleman,
He might have sold the Baba old,
And with a verse of Alcoran
Have managed to bamboozle him;
But, O dear, no! he tried to scheme:
Passed one night late the area gate,
And stole up to the hareem,
To carry off Ka-foozle-um.

The Baba was about to smoke—
His slaves rushed in with horrid din,
"Marshall! dogs your house have broke;
Come down, my Lord, and toozle 'em!"
The Baba wreathed his face in smiles,
Came down the stairs, to witness there,
The gentlemen, in three old tiles,
A kissing of Ka-foozle-um.

The pious Baba said no more
Than twenty prayers, but went up stairs,
And took a bow-string from the drawer,
And came back to Ka-foozle-um.
The maiden and the youth he took,
And choked them both, and little loth,
Together pitched 'em in the brook
Of Kedron, near Jerusalem.

And still the ancient legend goes,
When day is gone from Lebanon,
And when the eastern moonlight throws,
A shadow o'er Jerusalem,
Between the wailing of the cats
A sound there comes from ruined walls,
A ghost is seen with three old hats
A kissing of Ka-foozle-um.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA.

POMONA, LOS ANGELES, CAL.
Christmas, 1886.

The boom that struck Los Angeles a year ago and continued through the summer, acquiring proportions that appaled old Californians, so that they sold out and pocketed their gains, and were waiting for a crash in real estate, has, with the tremendous tide of immigration pouring in from all parts of the United States, taken on proportions and assumed a magnitude that no sane man would have believed possible one year ago. The new railroad and the Raymond Hotel have trebled the price of real estate in Pasadena, and the higher it goes the more ready they are to buy. There seems to be no limit to the amount of eastern capital flowing into the state, and millions are being invested in the most reckless manner.

Pomona is what the Californians call a slow town; not much over one hundred new buildings have been built during the past year, many of them very handsome and expensive. Ten new business blocks and a three story brick hotel complete the improvements in that line, but the speculators are begining to "catch on," and the prospect for another year is very bright. Land on the main business street, which sold four months ago for fifty dollars a front foot is now held at one to two hundred dollars. Orange orchards that sold in the summer for six and seven hundred dollars an acre have since been sold for a thousand dollars, and twelve hundred has been refused for some. Forty building lots one mile east of the center, with no improvements, were sold at auction last Saturday, and every lot taken in less than two hours, and forty acres west of the town are to be divided and sold in the same way. There are nine real estate firms in town, and these men are the most genial and affable of our citizens. They frequent the hotels in search of "tender-feet," as the new comers are called; lift their hats, make the lowest bows and extend the heartiest grip of the hand, and hope they have come to stay, and nothing would give them so much pleasure as to give them a free ride and show them our beautiful valley, with its great advantages over all other places in the state. These gentlemen reported sales during the last week of over one hundred and thirty thousand dollars, and when we consider that their commission amounts to five per cent on the first thousand and two and a half for the balance they surely made a very fair weeks' pay.

The orange crop is very large, and many have already sold their crop at one dollar and seventy-five cents a box on the trees, which will net them from three hundred to five hundred dollars an acre. The rainy season, which is oooked to set in in November, has not yet favored us, except for a few hours. Every passing vehicle casts up the usual amount of dust, and the street sprinkler makes its regular rounds, the sun shines from a cloudless sky, and after eight or nine months of sunshine I often wish I could see thunder-cloud or a cyclone, or feel the rumblings of an earthquake or anything to break the monotony. The ladies carry their fans and parasols to church, and doors and windows are opened to admit the air.

The insane political rant against the Chinese has subsided for the present, and John carries his baskets of clothes to and from the laundry on his balancing pole, and dispenses vegetables from his two-horse wagon as if nothing had happened. He has "nice turnipee, nice gleen pee-e, heap good stlawbellies, two boxe two bittee."

We know when Christmas comes only by the almanacs, as the hum of the honey-bee is heard in the land, the birds twitter in the trees, the geranium and the calla lily bloom gracefully beside the hedge, and the last rose of summer is as brilliant as ever, and fragrant as the breath of June.

G. L. TOPLIFFE.

Blonde Lady—"I really don't know what to give my husband for his Christmas."

Brunette Lady—"Why don't you give him a rest?"

"Well, if my husband was hen-pecked as much as yours—"

"Excuse me! Excuse me! but you misunderstand me; I mean a foot rest."

"Oh, excuse me. But, then, he has a very pretty foot rest.

"Let me see. He plays the violin, doesn't he?"

"Yes; he is considered a beautiful performer."

"Well, why don't you give him a chin rest. I'm quite sure he needs it."

That settled it. The blonde lady and the brunette lady do not converse as they perambulate in different directions.—Yonkers Statesman.

The witching hour of 2 a. m. was approaching. They were sitting on the sofa and you couldn't have slid a paper knife between them.

"No, my love," he said, you are the first dear object of my affections. In all my life I have never loved any other girl but you."

"Ting! ting!" softly chimed the costly French clock upon the mantle.

The lover started.

"That is," he exclaimed nervously, "I never loved any other girl as tenderly as I do you, my darling."

But the clock had done its fatal work.—Cambridge Chronicle.

At the battle of Shiloh a German officer rushed up to General Grant and said: "Shenеral Schwart's batteryis took." "Well sir," said Grant, "did you spike the guns before they were taken?" "Vat! schpike dem new guns? No scheneral, it would schpoil 'em." "Well, then, what did you do?" "Do? vy we went right in and we took 'em back again."

WHAT IS SCROFULA?

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, proves itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. Send for book of cures.

Amen!

I cannot say,
Beneath the pressure of life's cares to-day,
I joy in these;
But I can say
That I had rather walk this rugged way,
If Him it please.

I cannot feel
That all is well when darkening clouds conceal
The shining sun;
But, then, I know
God lives and loves; and say, since it is so,
Thy will be done.

I cannot speak
In happy tones; the tear-drops on my cheek
Show I am sad;
But I can speak
Of grace to suffer with submission meek;
Until made glad.

I do not see
Why God should e'en permit some things to be,
When he is love;
But I can see,
Tho' often, dimly, through the mystery,
His hand above!

I do not know
Where falls the seed that I have tried to sow
With greatest care;
But I know
The meaning of each waiting hour below
Sometime, somewhere!

I do not look
Upon the present, nor in Nature's book;
To read my facts;
But I do look
For promised blessings in God's holy Book
And I can wait.

I may not try
To keep the hot tears back—but hush that sigh,
"It might have been;"
And try to still
Each rising murmur, and to God's sweet will Respond "Amen!"

DONALD'S WIFE.

When Donald McKeon married his ward, Jessie Summer, many of his friends said he had made a mistake.

She was a merry, laughing girl of eighteen, fresh from school; and he, her father's old friend, a quiet, self-contained man of thirty-five, and it can scarcely be wondered at that many wise heads were shaken over the ill-sorted match.

Jessie had always stood a little in awe of the quiet, stern man, who had been a frequent visitor at her father's house during his life time.

But she was quite unprovided for, and Donald McKeon was wealthy; and when he asked her to be his wife in a matter-of-fact way, very much as he might have asked her to be his housekeeper, it seemed the easiest way to solve the troublesome problem of her life; and, besides this, she knew her father to have been under obligations to him, and more than suspected that the three years she had spent at a fashionable school since her father's death had been at his expense.

And so they were married, and he took her to the old home that his family had owned and occupied for generations.

It never occured to him that it was a dreary sort of life for a girl like Jessie, alone in that gloomy old house all day, with only the servants and the ghosts of by-gone generations for company.

And when she grew pale and listless, and lost her old elasticity of spirits, a fear that had haunted since his wedding day took possession of him and poisoned his life—a fear that she had married him for home and position and already regretted her choice.

Gladly would he have given her back her liberty had that been possible. But being a sensitive, undemonstrative man, he let her see nothing of this, but rather shrank from her because of the wrong he had done her, and came and went and made no sign.

And then people began to discover that Mrs. McKeon was a very charming woman, and her husband a wealthy and influential man, and invitations began to pour in upon her.

And Jessie plunged into this new life of fashionable dissipation with a zest that was the natural reaction from the gloom and loneliness of the past year.

At first her husband accompanied her wherever she went, for he had somewhat old-fashioned notions as to what was right and fitting for women to do.

But it was a life he utterly detested. It interfered with his business, and he looked below the surface and saw the hollow falsehood it was, after all, and it grated on his fine ideas of truth and sincerity.

Perhaps he was somewhat dictatorial in his manner of telling her this; perhaps she imagined so. But when he urged the point, she rebelled against his assumption of authority.

It was their first quarrel and their last, but it was a very bitter one.

She spoke cruel, stinging words, that rankled and stung him the more that he had learned to love her so dearly, as only reserved, self-constrained men such as he can love, and then only when they hoard all the treasures of their nature to lavish it in middle life on the woman who is their fate.

After that he opposed her in nothing, but it was as though a great wall of ice had risen between them.

He devoted himself to business, and she became the acknowledged leader of the most exclusive circle of the city.

She was madly extravagant. She made the old house a marvel of æsthetic beauty, and entertained like a princess.

Mrs. McKeon's toilets, jewels and dinners became the models of her set.

Men worshipped her beauty; but for all their flatteries she had the same smile of cold contempt, and no man was bold enough to venture beyond the most commonplace.

And so the years passed, and each one drifted them further apart, until they seldom met, except at their own grand entertainments. Each year she became more the slave of fashion; and he of his office. But through it all he loved her with an undying love, and his one thought was to gratify her every whim.

And when the dark days came—when ships that were sent out freighted with costly wares went down and were heard of no more—when houses that seemed stable as granite failed, and his wealth seemed melting away like a snowy wreath, his only thought was for her; and though each day his hair grew whiter, and his form grew more stooped with bending over the long columns of figures in which the balance was always on the wrong side, he whispered, "For her sake," and struggled on and denied her nothing.

And even on the day when he came home, knowing that all his efforts had availed him nothing, and that he was a poor man, his only thought was for her, that he would never more be able to give her the things she had bartered so much for.

He went in the grand old library, which was almost the only room in the house which remained unchanged, and tried to collect his thoughts. How would he tell her? was the question that reiterated itself through his brain, and for the first time in his life Donald McKeon was a coward.

The thought came to him of how she who had chaffed at her bonds when they were gilded would bear the closer relations that a straightened income would entail.

And he resolved that this at least he would spare her. After all his obligations were met there would be something left, not more than she had often lavished on one dinner, perhaps, but still enough to keep her from absolute want. Jessie should have this, and he would go away and work for her, and dream of her, but never again trouble her with his presence.

He sat down and wrote her a letter, telling her this simply, directly, and with the great love he bore her breathing through every word.

The servant told him she would not be in for some time, and he took the note himself up to her room.

It was a dainty place, bright as unknown wealth and an exquisite taste could make it.

He left the note on her toilet table, lingering a moment to touch caressingly the costly articles that were scattered about, all breathing of her presence.

When he returned to the parlor the early dusk was falling. A servant came bringing lights, but he dismissed him impatiently, and a few moments later heard the sound of wheels and the sweet voice of his wife in the hall giving some directions.

At length the silence became unbearable, and he seated himself at the piano. In his old bachelor days music had been his passion, but in these latter years of feverish struggle he has found no time for it. But when his fingers touched the keys all the despair, the pain and longing in his heart found voice in the rich chords that filled the room.

He played on and gradually the burden was lifted. Music gave him the comfort she ever gives to those who truly love her. It was no longer a wail of despair, but a pæan of thanksgiving for victory gained.

So absorbed was he that he did not hear a soft footstep enter the room. A hand was laid on his shoulder, and a tremulous voice said:

"Donald!"

His hand came down with a sudden discord on the keys. It was the first time Jessie had ever called him by that name.

He turned and saw her standing there in her dressing-gown of soft cashmere. The firelight was sending long rays down the stately gloom of the library, and she looked very beautiful against the rosy background.

"You read my letter, Jessie?"

"Yes; and I am sorry for your sake, Donald; you have worked so hard for your wealth."

"Do not think of me, Jessie. It is not for myself I care. I am not afraid of poverty. But, oh, my child, if I could save you from its sting! If it were at the sacrifice of my life, heaven is my witness, I would not spare it."

She came close to him, and laid her hands in his.

"Donald, there is a better thing you can give me than wealth can buy. Give me back the love I so madly threw away. Let me work with and help you, and I will bless the day that made us poor!"

"Jessie," he said, "are you sure of this? Do not try to deceive me. Do not say it if it is not true. I could go away now and learn to bear it, but to open my heart to this new hope would kill me!"

"Donald, do you think I am made of stone—that I could know all your kindness and patience all these years, and not learn to love you? Oh, so often I have longed to kneel at your feet and ask your forgiveness, but I believed I had forfeited your love by my folly."

"And you will not regret the loss of wealth and luxury?" he said, incredulously, "and can be happy with only my love?"

"You forget that papa and I were poor before I married you, Donald, and I was happier then than I have ever been since I learned to hate the things that cost me so much, and to envy the poorest woman, happy in her husband's love."

He turned the sweet tear-wet face to the firelight, and bent down and looked into her eyes. And then he took her close in his arms.

"My darling—oh, my darling!" he said, softly.

And in their hearts there was a gladness that all the treasures of the world could not buy.

"We've got a new teacher at our school," remarked the high school girl's brother as he rushed in last night, "and I tell you he's a regular Jim dandy." "Do not say 'Jim dandy,' dear, protested Mildred, say 'James exquisite'." — Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

A novel method of treating patients suffering from phthisis is described in the current number of The Medical Record. It was devised by a French physician, Dr. Borgeon of Lyons, who has been applying it for two years to chronic pulmonary and throat disease. The results are said to be remarkable. In acute general phthisis there has been an arrest of the progress of the disease and a cure in a few months. In advanced consumption marked improvements of symptons is rapidly secured, night-sweats ceasing and the cough becoming less harassing. Two hundred cases have been treated with singular success by Dr. Borgeon of Lyons, where the climate is more unfavorable for consumptives. His method has been introduced in the hospitals there and in Paris, and the medical authorities are favorable impressed with it.

The treatment consists of daily injections by enema of medicated gases. Carbonic acid gas when introduced into the system by this method is found to be harmless and painless. Sulphuretted hydrogen is mingled with it, the entire structure of the lungs is permeated by the medicated gas and remarkable curative effects are observed. The carbonic acid gas is practically inert when taken up by the veins of the intestines, but the sulphurous gas reaches every particle of diseased tissue in the lungs and throat, and is eliminated from the system in the process of expiration. The volume of gas used is very large. At the outset a single litre is introduced, but the quantity is rapidly increased to ten or twelve litres for each injection.

The results of this new system of treating consumption are so well vouched for that we commend the subject to the critical examination of medical circles in this country. Consumption is the chief scourge of the Atlantic seaboard. Any departure in therapeutics so radical as this French method deserves to be thoroughly investigated and adequately tested in American hospitals. Dr. Bergeon is not a sciolist, but a reputable physician of large practice and good standing. If his method be as successful as he asserts, it merits general attention from the profession in the United States.—N. Y. Tribune.

A CAT THAT CAN READ.

"I've a cat," said a lady to me the other day, "that can read. At any rate, she knows when a letter comes for her."

"A letter!" I exclaimed, in astonishment.

"Yes, a letter; and if you don't believe me, I will prove it to you. Just wait a minute till I direct one."

My friend left the room, and in a few minutes returned with a sealed envelope, addressed to "Miss Pussy, No. —Marlboro' Street, city."

"Now," said she, "If you will kindly post that for me to-night, and be here when the postman comes around on his first delivery to-morrow morning, you shall see that I am telling you facts."

I posted the letter as requested, and was at my friend's house promptly the next morning. Soon the bell rang, and shortly after the servant entered with a bundle of letters, among which was that for Miss Pussy. Placing them near her feline highness on the floor, my friend said—

"Now, Miss Pussy, pick out your letter."

Sure enough, Pussy at once showed an interest, and in a moment had pushed aside with her paws the envelope addressed to her. I was about to acknowledge my sin of incredulity, when my friend said:—

"Wait a minute. She'll open it."

Scarcely had she said this when Pussy tore the envelope, and in a moment was literally devouring — catnip. —Chicago Tribune.

WHERE IS HEAVEN?

This singular question was put to Sam Jones, the evangelist, by one of the wealthiest church members in Georgia whose cotton crop yielded him some $20,000 ast year. "Where is heaven?" said the rich planter. "I'll tell you where heaven is," said Mr. Jones. "If you will go down to the village, and buy fifty dollars' worth of groceries, put them in a wagon and take them to a poor widow on the hillside, who has three children sick. She is poor and a member of the church. Take with you a nurse and some one to cook their meals. When you get there read the 23d Psalm, and kneel by her side and pray; then you will find out where heaven is." Next day as the evangelist was walking through the village he met this same wealthy planter, his face beaming with joy. He spoke after this manner: "Mr. Jones, I have found out where heaven is. I went and did as you directed me. We took up the wagon load of groceries, and the poor widow was completely overcome with joy, she could not express her thankfulness. As I read to her the 23d Psalm my heart was filled with thankfulness to God, and when I prayed, the angels came down and I thought that I was nearer to heaven than I had ever been in my life. I left the nurse and cook in her humble dwelling and promised her that she would never suffer so long as I could help her."—Ex.

Work.

To work is the doom of men,
To work with the hands or brain,
With hammer, or spade, or pen—
To work, be it loss or gain;
For the Power that called us to breathe and live
Has linked us with labor's chain.

I work by the midnight oil
Till the night and morning meet,
And fear rides fast on the toil,
And spurs me with pitiless feet—
The fear lest the brain or the hand should fail;
I work for the bread we eat.

I work, and mute, through the night
She watches, sweet wife, by my side,
And now and again, as I seek the flight
Of fancy fluttering wide,
She raises her eyes, and they meet my own
Constant with love and pride.

It may not be ever so—
The future a prize may hold;
On her loving face, with hope aglow,
I gaze, and my heart is bold;
So, hey for the bonny, bright time, sweet wife,
When the work shall win the gold.

A PREACHER DRUNK.

The secular papers that print Sunday editions take a special interest in the preachers. In a leading daily last week there was a half column of telegraphic special under the head, in bold face, "A Preacher Drunk." The facts were as follows: A young minister who had been intemperate before his conversion and call to the ministry was persuaded to take a glass of wine by one who pretended to be his friend. The old appetite revived, and he was led on step by step until he was found in a saloon dead drunk. The men who plotted his ruin summoned the reporters to see him in his degradation. It was a big item and the enterprising caterers for those who read the daily papers telegraphed it all over the country. A preacher drunk! Why it was as good as a cyclone. They worked it up in their best style, and expected it to make a sensation. And it did.

I have a neighbor who gets his religion from the Sunday newspapers, and, of course, has a buzzard's appetite for carrion. He came to me with that paragraph marked, and said, "See here, Oldschool, you believe in preachers and I don't. Tell me what you think of that!" I read it and replied: "I think the editor and reporter have paid the Christian ministry a high and deserved compliment in that despatch."

"Why so? A compliment to the cloth to report that one of them was drunk last night in a saloon?"

"Yes, and I can make you see it if you will listen to me. Do you know how many preachers there are in the United States?"

"No; but I reckon there's lots of them, for its an easy way of getting a living."

"I am not so sure of that. People are mighty particular now-a-days. A preacher has got to be smart or they won't hear him. A man who has brains enough to get a living by preaching in these times could get rich in any other profession. But as you can't answer my question I shall have to answer it myself. According to the census of 1880 there are over 75,000; and now, mark you, when one of these 75,000 falls it is considered so remarkable that it is telegraphed all over the land. The Bible says that ministers are but men. It speaks of them as 'earthern vessels.' And the great wonder is that among so many so few turn out badly. So you see the publication of this case three thousand miles from where it occured shows how rare and remarkable it is. They don't have commonplace and every day occurrences telegraphed across the continent. And now let me ask you another question. Suppose, when you opened your daily paper to-morrow you found a despatch at the head of a column from Danbury, N. J., or Dover, Del., with the heading, 'A Lawyer Drunk,' and that in the despatch all the details were given of A. B., a promising young lawyer, who had become intoxicated, and was found in a low groggery dead drunk—what would you think in that case?"

"I would think that the editor was a fool."

"Why so?"

"Because there are lots of lawyers all over the country who get drunk every day. The finding of a lawyer in a whisky shop is hardly an item of local news, much less an item to be wired across the continent."

"Well, how is it with doctors and merchants? Suppose the papers should have a despatch of a quarter of a column whenever any of them got drunk anywhere in the United States?"

"Why, bless you, no paper would be big enough to hold all the despatches. We could send half a dozen from this one town every day."

"Yes, and don't you see the result of your own admissions? The fall of Christian ministers is regarded by telegraph operators as a first class item, like an earthquake, a cyclone, or a million-dollar conflagration. It is a thing so rare, so unexpected, so out of the usual course of things, that it must be sent flashing around the world. You don't believe in ministers, but you do believe in rumsellers. You don't go to church to hear our preacher, but you spend your Sundays in Tom O'Flanagan's saloon. You think of course that Tom is a better man than Rev. Dr. Abell, or you wouldn't prefer his society. Now, suppose you read in your daily paper that Jim McGrady over in some town on the Atlantic coast, was found drunk this morning behind his own bar; would you come to me and say, 'Read that?'"

"Why, no, of course."

"Well, why not?"

"Because that's a thing that happens every day in hundreds of places. It wouldn't be news. A man who handles edged tools will cut his own fingers once in a while, no matter how careful he is. And besides it's no great matter if a fellow does get a little too much now and then."

"No, not a great matter, as it seems, for your chosen companions—the model men whose society you cultivate; but a very great matter for one preacher out of 75,000, and he evidently led astray by a rumseller. Some heartless saloonist, knowing that this young preacher had once been dissipated, and that the appetite for strong drink might be revived, watched for him as a spider watches for a fly, and enticed him into his den on purpose to destroy him. You know that nearly all the bartenders will do such things and glory in them, and yet you admire them and patronize them. But when they succeed in bringing a preacher, one out of 75,000, down to their level and yours, you denounce the whole ministry as a nuisance and a fraud. It is to cater to such buzzard appetites as yours that the daily papers have these scandals telegraphed. But they don't realize that in so doing they are paying the highest possible compliment to the general purity of the Christian ministry."—Obediah Oldschool, in The Interior.

TOBOGGAN SPEED.

If toboggan slides are properly constructed no serious accident can happen. Raised sides keep the toboggan in the track, which should not be wide enough to let the vehicle slew around. The speed attained on a steep incline is something startling, and the first time a man tries to coast he thinks he is going to kingdom come, shuts his eyes, grips the hand-rail, breathes a short prayer, and finds himself gliding along comfortably on the level ground without a hurt or scratch. Then he tries it again, and yells like a Comanche all the way down the slide. The toboggans mostly in use are faster and stronger than the Indian model. They are made of narrow strips of hard wood, slightly rounded on the under side. The center strip and the two outside strips are a little thicker than the others, and serve as runners. Several other improvements that secure flexibility and strength are also introduced. The expert's toboggan is shod with steel strips, fastened on ingeniously without screws or rivets, and not lessening the the flexibility in the least. On this machine the tremendous speed of three miles a minute has been made. The sensation is like falling off Liberty's torch when you travel down hill at that speed. The steel-shod toboggan is 25 per cent faster than the plain wood machine, but the latter is fast enough to make your hair curl. On the Orange slide, 1400 feet long, including the level, the plain toboggan makes the journey in 16 seconds and the expert in 12 seconds. This slide was built last winter, and was the first in the United States, barring a few near the Canada line. This year public slides are being put up all over the country, wherever water freezes in the winter, and clubs are being organized and private slides built in many places. At Chicago 4000 people attended the opening of a big slide, and at St. Paul and Minneapolis the sport is in full blast. New York and Brooklyn are going in for the fun with enthusiasm, and more than 1000 toboggans have already been sold by one firm. The Tuxedo Park slide is the best in the country. The incline is built on the slope of a hill and is 600 feet long. The total length of the slide is 3200 feet, or nearly two-thirds of a mile. A toboggan travels the whole distance in 30 seconds, which beats any other kind of traveling, except being shot out of a cannon or jumping from the Brooklyn bridge, and I don't know but what it comes pretty near beating the latter; it does for comfort and safety, any way. Dakota has simply gone crazy over toboggans. Every town is having a public slide, just as all towns had roller skating rinks two years ago, and the whole population of the territory is sliding down hill. There is more fun and excitement in coasting down Dakota mountains than in stealing horses or chasing Indians, and the morale of the territory is rapidly improving. Tobogganing is glorious sport, and is bound to become and remain popular. It entices people out of doors, fills their lungs with fresh air, and sends their blood dancing through their veins. Why, it makes boys again of us old chaps. The expense of the sport is not great. You can get a first-class toboggan for $5, or make a pretty good one for yourself for a dollar or two. If you join a club you buy a blanket coat of gorgeous hue, a pair of knee breeches, stockings, moccasins, sash and togue, and for $12 get yourself up like a regular Canuck and look stunning, just like me. A club of 50 members can put in $10 a head and build a first rate slide and keep it in order. The incline should be one foot in four and the width of the track 45 inches—about twice the width of a toboggan. Side boards and rails keep the machine from flying from the track, and there is no danger at all. A man sits behind and steers the craft with his foot, but if he steers badly he can't hurt anybody. If your club is composed of lazy men, you can have a rope and pulley and an old horse to haul the toboggans up, but a six-foot toboggan weighs only fourteen pounds, and it does a man good to drag or carry it.—New York Sun.

There was an old preacher once who told some boys of the Bible lesson he was to read in the morning. The boys finding the place, glued together the connecting pages. The next morning he read on the bottom of the page: "When Noah was 120 years old he took unto himself a wife, who was"—then turning the pages—"140 cubits long, 40 cubits wide, built of gopher wood, and covered with pitch inside and out." He was naturally puzzled at this. He read it again, verified it, and then said: "My friends, this is the first time I ever read this in the Bible, but I accept it as evidence of the assertion that we are fearfully and wonderfully made."—Editor Grady.

SPRINGFIELD is handsomely remembered in the will of the late William Merrick of that city. His estate will probably exceed $200,000, of which the new city hospital will receive about $75,000, the home for friendless women and children about $50,000, and the city library $30,000.

WE have recorded some pretty mean transactions occasionally, but they are all eclipsed by the persons who have been sending Mrs. Logan unpaid messages of condolence by telegraph. The number of them, too, almost passes belief, as she is said to have paid over $30 for this sort of "sympathy."

THE annual reunion of the Massachusetts Press Association at the United States Hotel, Boston, on Tuesday, was of the usual pleasant order, about 125 members and ladies being present. The old board of officers was reëlected, speeches were made by Gov. Ames and others, and there was a very successful exhibition of mind reading.

IT is quite as dangerous being innocent as it is to be guilty in New York, at times. One of the city's model policemen was chasing a fugitive the other day and fired two shots at him, missing him, but killing an innocent man in his own door. It might have been as well to let the guilty man escape in the first place, without murdering another person.

THE 'longshoremen about New York, Jersey City and Brooklyn have joined hands with the striking coal handlers, and yesterday about 20,000 of them quit work by order of the ocean association of the Knights of Labor, to enforce their demand for higher wages. Nearly all the transatlantic and coastwise steamers were greatly hindered in handling freight and coal, and the departure of several of them delayed for a day or more, and the delay will become a serious matter unless the companies can obtain new men or come to an early agreement with the strikers.

UNDER the auspices of the Trinity Club Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Boston's fashionable Trinity church, is attempting to reach the masses by a series of religious meetings to be held in Faneuil Hall. At the initial meeting last Sunday the hall was filled with a motley audience to hear the gifted preacher, who spoke eloquently on the pity of the Heavenly Father for His children. If there were more of this carrying of the gospel to the poor the teachings of the New Testament would be better exemplified and the kingdom of the Lord more rapidly extended.

BY a vote of 219 to 41 the House at Washington passed the interstate commerce bill last Friday, and it is probable the president will sign it. The measure is not a model of clearness, but it is a move in the right direction, in applying to the trunk lines a system of regulation and responsibility such as the Massachusetts railroad commissioners apply to roads in this state, and will promote justice and fair play. The legislation committee of the Knights of Labor has sent a letter to President Cleveland protesting against several features of the bill, and asking him to veto it.

THERE was some pretty vigorous talk in the United States Senate Monday in regard to the outrages of the Canadian goverment upon our fishermen, and with only one dissenting vote the Edmunds bill was passed, authorizing the president to retailate in kind, denying to Canadian fishermen the privileges which they deny to ours, and closing our ports to their fish, or any other products if it is necessary. The measure will undoubtedly pass the House, and Canada will find before long that Uncle Sam is awake and don't propose to be kicked any more without kicking back. When the Canucks get this fairly through their heads they may come down from their high horse and be a little more amenable to reason.

ANOTHER train robbery, after the most approved fashion, occurred on the Texas and Pacific Railroad early Sunday morning, 60 miles west of Fort Worth, Tex. The engineer was obliged to stop his train where the passenger cars were left on a high trestle, when the robbers went through the express and mail cars, getting several thousand dollars. They magnanimously left the passengers undisturbed, and the latter did the same by the robbers, as they could not get out on the trestle, and they probably were delighted at having so good an excuse for remaining quietly in their seats. The train hands in the Southwest ought to be provided with Gatling guns and other war paraphernalia to repel such invasions.

REPRESENTATIVE RANNEY gave a dinner to Senator Dawes at Washington last Saturday evening, in honor of his reëlection. Mr. Dawes was in a happy mood, naturally, and expressed the kindest feelings toward those who had felt it their duty to oppose his reëlection, and in regard to the Democrats in the Legislature who voted for him he had this to say:—

To those political opponents who believed that differences of political opinion and party affiliation honestly and earnestly maintained are still compatible with patriotic public service, and, acting under that belief gave me their support, I tender my thanks. I tender my thanks for such an expression of confidence. Upon no other condition could that support have been either offered or accepted. If these political opponents had believed me capable of abating one jot of the political convictions of a life time to win their support, they would have been the last men to have given it to one so unworthy of it. They stand by their arms and I stand by mine.

Railroad men are exceedingly liable to have accidents happen to them, but all of them do not happen to have such luck fall to their lot as Albert Newton, baggage master at the Boston & Albany station, who receives some $20,000 by the recent death of an aunt in Chicago. He will leave his present position soon, and accept Horace Greeley's suggestion to go West.

The flood of this week shows that radical changes are needed in the highways of the town at several points. The flat on the road to Monson near Fay's bridge, Commercial street between the railroad and the river, and the road near Merrick's bridge on the way to Springfield should all be raised and dry bridges put in, so that in case of high water in the river travel need not be interrupted. Especially is this needed near Fay's bridge.

The starting of a prohibition paper in Western Massachusetts was advocated, and a committee appointed to look after the work in towns where little or nothing is being done. Rousing speeches were made by Messrs. Milliken of Three Rivers, Dight of Monson, Cutler of Wilbraham, and others.

HIGH WATER.

The cold weather which had lasted for a week or more and made the sleighing first-class, took a sudden turn Saturday night, and Sunday morning there was plenty of water running in the streets. The weather continued warm, and Monday a smart rain set in, so that by noon most of the large quantity of snow had disappeared, and the roads were badly washed in places. The streams were badly swollen, the Quaboag river being even higher than at the time of the big freshet a year ago, the ice below keeping the immense quantity of water back. Marcy's lumber yard was all afloat Monday afternoon, and a heavy boom had to be put in to keep the lumber from going down stream. The snow on the roof caused one of his store sheds to fall, but no great damage was done. At Holden's mill the building was almost completely surrounded with water, which came uncomfortably near the boiler fires. Considerable damage was done at Smith's new shoddy mill on the road to Monson, the water filling the basement and at one time threatening to wreck the building. The water at the wire mill was the highest ever known, almost reaching the pump house, which in the summer stands in a field a long distance from the river. There was no water in the road across the flat near Fay's bridge Monday morning, but when the Monson stage made the trip at noon the driver had hard work to get through, and came near capsizing. Coming by the quarry road was no better, as the water ran three feet deep across Commercial street below the hat shop. At the Merrick bridge on the road to Springfield the water ran five feet deep over the road, which was closed until Tuesday afternoon. Every hollow between the hills was a good-sized pond, and all low grounds were covered. Any one with a boat could easily have gone to North Monson by water across the fields Monday afternoon. The water was at its highest Monday night, and fell rapidly, leaving the meadows covered with huge cakes of ice.

At first no one seemed to be able to identify her, but it was afterwards ascertained that she was Mrs. Defina Luce, daughter of the late Allan Thompson of Wales.

THE STORY OF A MINISTER'S ENGAGEMENT.

Never before have the gossips of this usually quiet village been so busy as during the past three months, or since the engagement of Rev. E. H. Byington to Miss Lulu Workman of Worcester was announced, the report being that he was already engaged to a Monson lady, Miss Reed, the niece of Mrs. Horatio Lyon. This report was at once denied by Rev. Mr. Byington, and as emphatically asserted to be true by the opposite party. There are of course two sides to every story, and plenty to take up with each side, so the affair has been kept stirred up until a council will probably be called to settle the question as to whether Rev. Mr. Byington has acted honorably in the matter or not. The story goes that for some time previous to last June Rev. Mr. Byington had paid marked attention to Miss Reed, and had proposed marriage to her at least four times, but his offers were declined, owing to the influence of the aunt, the understanding being, however, that if he would secure a place elsewhere to preach the marriage would take place. The minister was supposed to be seeking another engagement, and thus matters stood when he went to Europe last June. While there he ran across Miss Workman, whom he had previously met at Worcester. He traveled with the party, and on his return to Monson their engagement was announced. Then the friends of Miss Reed made known their side of the story, which was promptly denied, Mr. Byington saying that all talk of matrimony between them ceased when he went to Europe, his offer having been positively rejected at the time. This was denied, and stories reflecting on the truthfulness of the minister circulated. Under these circumstances he felt bound to protect his honor, and with the consent of the deacons and officers of the church will call a committee of five clergymen some time next week, when both sides will be heard, and a decision as to his course in the matter rendered. In the meantime Mrs. Lyon and her niece, with several other influential members of the church, attended Sunday service with the Methodists.

The annual report of the Sabbath school of the East Congregational church was read by the secretary, Stephen B. Witherell, at the session of the school last Sabbath, which shows the great prosperity and gain in numbers the past year. The total number including teachers and scholars attending the school at the commencement of the year was 405, and at the close there were 501, a gain of 92. The total average attendance for the year was 281. The greatest number of pupils present any one Sabbath the past year was 335. There was present January 16th, 1886, 359, or 24 more than was ever present in the school at one time before. The primary class commenced 1886 with 54 members and added 12 during the year. The average age of this class being 6 years; the greatest number present at any one Sabbath was 46. The average attendance for the year was 33, or 9 less than the year before, which is accounted for by the prevalence of scarlet fever in the town. The members present every Sabbath were eleven, the superintendent and secretary, teachers—Joseph A. Cummings, Mrs. S. B. Witherell, Mrs. H. B. Anderson. Scholars—Edmond R. Sturtevant, Thomas W. A verse of scripture was written in each by their teachers. The number of deaths were 4—Ethel Aldrich, Alice Banister, Lewis Banister and Willie Lashua. The contributions for the year was $316.38, $46.50 more than the year before. This amount does not include $92 which has been contributed to the home and foreign missions by the several mission circles, the members of which are also members of the school. The young Ladies Mission circle, which includes several of the others, who have meetings monthly for study and prayer, contributed at their annual meeting $30 from their "Mite Boxes" and thank offerings. The total amount contributed by the school from all sources was $408.38. The average yearly amount given by this school for the past five years has been $277.49.

Editor Standard:—There are persons, strange to say, who, when driving in the public streets, apparently consider themselves licensed to disregard the presence of pedestrians, while to jeopardize human life seems of little moment to them. But when such a person runs against and injures a pedestrian, a lady it may be, and does not so much as alight from his vehicle to assist the sufferer, or to express a regret, but drives on leaving the injured person to be cared for by others less involved but more human than himself; such a person is guilty of gross inhumanity. It would not seem that a man would be so devoid of the instincts of a gentleman; yet a case in point has come to our attention within the past week, being that of a lady in Ware, who, last Saturday afternoon, while walking by the roadside on Bank street, the sidewalk being too icy for safe walking, was struck by a passing sleigh, occupied by a lady and gentleman, and thrown violently to the ground. Being an elderly lady and quite stout she sustained a severe shock and numerous bruises. Neither of the occupants of the sleigh were heard to utter a word of warning to avert the danger, nor of solicitation for the sufferer after the deed had been done, nor did the gentleman get out of his sleigh to offer assistance, but drove right along without any profer of service or show of anxiety or regret. A stranger close by, noticing the indifference manifested by the occupants of the sleigh, indignantly pronounced it the most unmanly act he had ever witnessed. * *

Talk about the committee appointments of the Legislature has by no means died away, and honorable members and senators are yet busy tracing out the supposed lines of payment for services rendered. Senator Phillips was conspicuously overlooked in favor of Maj. Gould. Then in the House there are critics who observe that Springfield has fared exceedingly well, and couple this fact with reference to the falling away of Western Massachusetts support for Mr. Taft in the speakership fight. The Palmer lawyer, too, suffered from the opposition of the Fitchburg railroad people. It will be remembered that the sale of the Hoosac tunnel was then pending. If the matter was to go over, the railroad people decidedly preferred Mr. Noyes to a man who lived on the line of the Boston & Albany railroad.—Sunday Republican.

Postmaster Corse of Boston is at Washington endeavoring to secure a fast mail train between Boston and New York, his idea being to have it composed only of mail and express cars, leaving each city about 10 o'clock in the evening and arriving at 5 in the morning, giving time for the distribution of mail for the city in season for the early delivery, and also enabling mail for points beyond to be sent out by the morning trains.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, JAN. 26th, 1887.

By Thursday morning last the excitement over the senatorial election had visibly subsided. A few were disposed to think that the bottom had dropped out of the Republican party, but most of those who were defeated accepted the situation with a good grace. A private letter received from ex-Governor Robinson says: "I have great relief that the senatorial contest is over, and that I am not called to further service."

There was presented in the House Thursday a petition headed by Lewis Hayden, the colored messenger in the secretary's office, asking that a monument be erected in the library burial ground to the memory of Crispus Attucks (a negro) and the other men who fell in the Boston massacre March 5th, 1770. The petition is signed by hundreds of prominent persons, including ex-Govs. Long, Butler and Robinson. Hayden himself used to be prominent in the early anti-slavery excitement, and was himself a slave.

The committee on taxation is determined to find some way of taxing more personal property, and several schemes are already proposed to make owners divulge.

A trace of bad feeling about the senatorship appeared in the House Friday in the form of an order by Mr. Graves of Groton, who voted for Long, then for Robinson and then for Dawes—as to the expediency of legislation to prevent any officer of the executive department, especially the treasurer and receiver general, or any judge of any probate court, from lobbying members of the Legislature within the state house building. Mr. Beard insists on a hearing, and Mr. Graves says the whole thing is a joke.

It looks as if an attempt was being made to anticipate legislation on employers' liability. A petition was presented in the House Friday, signed by P. L. Moen, Roger Wolcott, J. H. Sawyer, W. C. Lovering, T. H. Edmonds and other wealthy men and large employers of labor, asking to be incorporated for the purpose of insuring against losses by accidents or personal injuries.

One of the new political proposals of Friday came from Mr. Quincy of Quincy, in the form of an order as to the expediency of preventing any one but the treasurers of political committee from handling political funds, and requiring such treasurers to make public statements occasionally.

Important projects are on foot relating to the railroad system of the state. On Tuesday the Boston and Lowell people, who declined to bid for the Hoosac tunnel anything like the sum named by the governor and council, petitioned for authority to buy the property of the Mystic river corporation, of the Ocean Terminal Railroad Dock and Elevator Company. This is for the improvement of their Boston facilities. It is probable, also, that they will petition for a charter to build a line over the hills west of Williamsburg to North Adams. A survey was made of the line in 1867 for the Central Massachusetts road, and the maximum grade would be only 70 feet to the mile. The Lowell, as lessee of the Central, does not like to be dependent upon the Fitchburg for the transportation of its cars through the tunnel on the terms provided in the sale to the Fitchburg for the sake of keeping the tunnel open.

Some interesting points appear in the annual report of the prison commissioners. In 1886 there were 128 commitments to the state prison. The net cost of the institution was $74,184, or $4185 less than in 1885. The average population of the prison was 522,—an increase of 32. Sixteen per cent had been in the prison before. Commitments to the woman's prison fell from 240 to 205, and the average population was 245,—a decrease of 24. The plan of releasing women on ticket of leave is working successfully, and the women are allowed to keep the wages they earn while they are under the control of the board. Only 41 of the 205 were born of American parents; 24 per cent of them were under 21 years, and 37 per cent were from 21 to 30; 79 per cent of them were intemperate.

The strong resolutions of Senator Morse of Norfolk, urging the national government to take retaliatory measures against Canada, have been adopted without opposition. Naturally, perhaps, since the Edmunds bill had already passed the national Senate.

Out of $65,914 appointed for state house expenses for 1886, only $54,376 was spent, leaving a balance of $11,538.

Senator Morse has aimed a blow at liquor sellers by his order proposing not to allow any one to advertise illegal business by a sign or otherwise, and Senator Phillips of Hampden has put in a bill to break up the liquor clubs which supply their members with liquor in violation of the law.

Business matters of importance came into the Legislature to-day. They involved propositions to abolish convict labor; to regulate telegraph and telephone companies further, to compel them to make uniform charges and to put telephone companies under the supervision of the railroad commisioners; to exempt from the weekly payments law all towns with less than 6000 inhabitants, provided a bargain accordingly be made with employes when they begin work; to allow railroads to issue bonds for 50 years instead of 20, as at present; and to provide some better and safer way of heating passenger cars. The Massachusetts Temperance Alliance petitions for a stringent prohibitory law.

A direct blow at the civil service law has been made by Representative Collison of Boston, who offered in the House to-day a bill on leave requiring civil service examiners to certify to the appointing power the names of all who have passed the examinations, making mention of those who are entitled to preference as veterans. Then the appointing power may make the appointment from the whole list which is certified.

A petition was presented in the House Tuesday signed by Albert W. Weeks, Charles B. Fisk, Lyman Dimock, E. G. Buss. Frank L. Brooks, S. Edgerton, Freeman Smith, and G. H. Justin, saying that they are members of the Second Baptist church of Palmer and that it is not and never has had any legal organization, wherefore they pray to be incorporated as a church under the name of "The Second Baptist Church of Palmer."

Hiram Newton and others have petitioned that the boundry between Greenwich and Enfield may be straightened and better defined. They say that the boundary is crooked, indefinite and uncertain, and does not run in a straight line from boundary stone to boundary stone.

Over Forty Years has Pond's Extract been used by the people and profession as the best remedy for Pain, Sores, Catarrh, etc. Note name of sole proprietors on every wrapper. Pond's Extract Co., New York and London.

Geo. W. Earhart, Captain of Police, Baltimore, Md., says: "I have used Salvation Oil and found it a most excellent remedy. I recommend it to all." Yesterday I had a horrid cold. I used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and to-day I am as well as ever.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer three cases half-bleached table damask, 60 inches wide, at 35c.; usual price 50c. 500 dozen napkins $1.25, cost $1.57 to land.

All medical authorities agree that catarrh is no more nor less than an inflammation of the lining membrane of the nasal air passages. Nasal catarrh and all catarrhal affections of the head are not diseases of the blood, and it is a serious mistake to treat them as such. No conscientious physician ever attempts to do so. It is held by eminent medical men that sooner or later a specific will be found for every disease from which humanity suffers. The facts justify us in assuming that for catarrh at least a positive cure already exists in Ely's Cream Balm.

Most Excellent.

J. J. Atkins, Chief of Police, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "My family and I are beneficiaries of your most excellent medicine, Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; having found it to be all that you claim for it, desire to testify to its virtue. My friends to whom I have recommended it, praise it at every opportunity." Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption is guaranteed to cure coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, croup and every affection of Throat, Chest and Lungs.

CHIPMAN'S PILLS purify the blood, increase the appetite, make you feel new. A positive cure for Sick Headache, Malaria and Dyspepsia. Try them. For sale by all druggists. 1y27

THE USUAL TREATMENT of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands of despairing patients can testify. On this point a trustworthy medical writer says: "Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but many, if not most, of the remedies in general use by physicians afford but temporary benefit. A cure certainly cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes." Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy which combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient. 2w42

Sure Enough.

I kissed her hand. She slapped my cheek,
The blow came sharp and quick.
Her eyes flashed fire. She did not speak.
My blood boiled hot and thick.

"What do you mean?" I asked, enraged,
"We're all alone here, and
And you know quite well we're engaged;
Then why not kiss your hand."

"I do detest a man," she snapped,
"Who'll kiss my finger-tips,
In love's ways one should be more apt—
Else what's the use of lips."

—Somerville Journal.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

There is one consolation. The high hats obstruct the view of the women as well as the men.—Puck.

The toboggan shows its inclination to fastness early. It gets on a bender even before it is finished.—St. Paul Herald.

She—"And do you love me, George?" He (a medical student)—"Yes, from my sixth left rib." She—"Sir!" He—"I mean from the bottom of my heart."—Tid Bits.

"The prisoner has a very smooth face," said little Justice Duffy the other day. "Yes, your honor," said the facetious policeman, "he was ironed just before I brought him in."—Life.

"Your honor," pleaded the condemned man, "will you put my execution for Thursday, instead of Friday?" "Why," inquired the judge." "Because Friday is such an unlucky day."—New York Sun.

"And what was the disposition of the remains?" was asked of a man who had lost his mother-in-law. "The disposition of the remains," he replied, with real feeling, "was quiet and peaceful."—Harper's Bazar.

"What is Jigson in mawning for, do you know?"

"It's either for his bwothaw aw his dawg. One of 'em died lawst week, but I weally fawget which it was."—Town Topics.

Fond Mother—"Isn't he a beauty? and only lacks one thing of being exactly like his pa."

Dr. Snubb—"And that is—"

Little Tommy (interuptingly)—"False teeth."—The Judge.

Mrs. B. (who though still young has been three times married)—"Oh, if I were a man I would make a name for myself." Tom (who is number three)—"Strikes me that you've done very well as it is, my dear. This is the third you have had."—Life.

"Times have changed greatly since Shakespere's day," remarked Spriggins.

"Yes, just so," remarked Fitzgobble. "Now, Shakespere says, 'The apparel oft proclaims the man'."

"Well, what does it proclaim now?"

"The dude, generally."—Exchange.

The small girl went to church on Christmas with mamma. Papa remained at home trying on his new Christmas hat. When they got home he said to his pet. "Well, darling, what was the text?" "I'm not sure, papa, but it sounded like 'Many are cold, but few are frozen'."—Troy Times.

Didn't Know Them. Mr. Mushroom—"I don't see why it is that my gas bills are so much larger than last winter."

Little Willie—"Why, sister's engagement is on now, and it was off last winter."

Angie—"I guess you don't know Charlie and me. If his calling here affected the gas bills at all, it made 'em less."—Chicago Rambler.

Professor (who has been giving lessons in phys'ology)—"Where is your heart, dear?"

Mabel—"Here."

Professor—"And where is your liver?"

Mabel (indignantly)—"I haven't any. Cows have livers."

Professor—"Oh, yes, you have."

Mabel (after some thought)—"Well, then, where is my bacon?"—Life.

Sickness at the Farm. New Yorker—"Well, Jonathan, how are things down at the farm?"

Country Cousin—"Well, Nancy's got the diphtheria, and the cattle are all down with pleuro-pneumonia."

New Yorker—"I suppose then it occasions you a good deal of anxiety?"

Country Cousin—"Well, I guess so. I've been up every night in the last week with those cattle."—Tid Bits.

Miss Ethel—"Yes, indeed, we girls are fully alive to the justice of the popular criticism on chattering women, and that is the reason we organized our Thought club."

Mr. Blank—"Thought club?"

Miss E.—"Yes, and it is doing us such a world of good."

"Mr. B.—"I don't doubt it."

Miss E.—"No, indeed. Why, at the last meeting we talked five whole hours on the subject of silent meditation."—Omaha World.

"The great trouble with you, John, is," said a lady to her husband, who was suffering from the effects of the night before, "You can not say 'No.' Learn to say 'No,' John, and you will have fewer headaches. Can you let me have a little money this morning?" "No," said John with apparent ease.—Puck.

A small boy who was studying English history was asked "What the Prince of Wales would be when the Queen died." "Please, sir, an orphan," replied the scholar decisively.

An old gentleman being asked what he wished for dinner replied: "An appetite, good company, something to eat and a napkin."—Chicago Living Church.

"By medicines life may be prolonged,
Yet death will seize the doctor, too."
True, all must die, yet few must suffer while they live. Stop pain, prolong life, by taking Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," a cure for consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs,) as well as for coughs, colds, bronchitis, catarrh, and a specific in liver complaints, scrofula, and all blood and skin diseases. Sold everywhere.

LUNG TROUBLES PROMPTLY CURED.

Messrs. Editors:—About three years ago my right lung became affected, and I then commenced taking Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer. I used it about nine months and that lung has not troubled me since. Last summer I had a cold and it settled on my left lung; it got firmly seated and I began to to take the Cough Killer again; now I don't cough at all.—H. W. Aldrich, Northbridge Center, Mass. For sale by all druggists. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

For Costiveness, Biliousness, Headache and all Feverish Habits, use Dr. Seth Arnold's Bilious Pills. 25c.

DOING THINGS WELL.

"There!" said Harry, throwing down the shoe brush; "that'll do. My shoes don't look very bright, but no matter. Who cares?"

"Whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well," said his father, who had heard the boy's careless speech.

Harry blushed while his father continued:—

"My boy, your shoes look wretchedly. Pick up the brush and make them shine. When you have finished come into the house."

As soon at Harry appeared with his well-polished shoes his father said:—

"I have a little story to tell you. I once knew a poor boy, whose mother taught him the proverb which I repeated to you a few moments ago. This boy went out to service in a gentleman's family, and he took pains to do everything well, no matter how unimportant it seemed. His employer was pleased, and took him to his shop. He did his work well there, and when sent on errands he went quickly and was soon back in his place. So he advanced step by step until he became clerk and then partner in business. He is now a rich man, and anxious that his son Harry should practice the rule that made him prosper."

"Why, papa, were you a poor boy once?" asked Harry.

"Yes, my son,—so poor that I had to go out to service, and black boots, and wait on table, and do any service that was required of me. By doing little things well, I was soon trusted with more important ones."—Young Reaper.

WINTER BED COVERING.

An anti-comfortable crusade might well be started by some woman who loves her kind, and who knows, like the writer, what instruments of disease and death they may become. Even a dirty blanket is far more tolerable than a dirty comfortable, for blankets are porous and allow the air to penetrate. Every wearer of woolen cloth, in whatever form, knows that the loosely woven fabrics are the warmest, this arising from the fact that air is held in the meshes and becomes a medium of warmth. One blanket of pure wool, no matter how coarse its quality, has more warmth-producing power than a four-pound comfortable, yet, because the feeling of weight is lacking, there is immediate outcry that it is cold. Two blankets and a light comfortable will furnish a bed amply, and the lesser weight will mean quieter sleep of a far more refreshing quality than any to be had under ten or twelve pounds of cotton. Blankets can be washed or steam cleansed, and if children's beds are in question, soft gray or blue blankets may well replace white, which is soiled in a week of such experiments as most children indulge in with the bed clothes, which are often tents by day as well as covering by night.—Demorest's Monthly.

PACK THE LUNGS WITH AIR.

Deep breathing and holding of the breath is an item of importance. Persons of weak vitality find an uninterrupted succession of deep and rapid breathing so distressing that they are discouraged from persevering in the exercise. Let such persons take into the lungs as much air as they can at a breath, and hold it as long as they can, and they will find a grateful sense of relief in the whole abdominal region. Practice will increase the ability to hold the breath and the capacity of the lungs. After a time the art may be learned of packing the lungs. This is done by taking and holding the long breath, and then forcing more air down the trachæ by swallows of air. The operation may be described by that of a fish's mouth in the water. To those who have never learned it, it will be surprising to what extent the lungs may be packed. Caution at first is needful, but later practice will warrant larger use of the treatment. The whole thoracic and abdominal cavities will receive immediate benefit, right exercise will bring welcome improvement.—Herald of Health.

"Hubby, dear, I can't wait to tell you what I am going to buy you for New Year's!"

"Darling wife, what is it?"

"Well, I am going to get you a silver card tray and a bronze Hercules for the mantel and a lovely Russian table rug to lay in front of my dressing case. What are you going to get me Tootsy?"

"I've been thinking, Jane, and I have concluded to get you a new shaving brush." (Trouble ensues.)—Washington Critic.

It is related of the late Dr. Hodge of Princeton Theological seminary that he once asked a student for a definition of eternity. The student after some hesitation, replied that he used to know the definition, but had forgotten it. "Oh, my, my, my!" exclaimed Dr. Hodge, bringing his hand forcibly upon the table, "What a calamity! The only man in the universe that ever knew what eternity is has forgotten."—Stray.

A pastor in a state adjoining this, preaching from the text, "Beware of Covetousness," said: "Last Sunday night the collection amounted to $1.80, and the dollar was thrown in by a Baptist brother from Richmond, Va., who happened to be here and did not know any better. The other 600 of you dropped in the 80 cents."—Richmond Religious Herald.

She was grumbling about some of her Christmas presents. "Don't look a gift mule in the mouth, my dear," said her husband. "Keep your mouth shut, then," said she, with a significant energy which effected the result demanded.—Washington Critic.

Pencils are sometimes lead, but the pen has to be driven.—Boston Transcript.

Growing Old.

Softly, oh softly, the years have swept by thee,
Touching thee lightly, with tenderest care;
Sorrow and death they have often brought nigh thee,
Yet they have left thee but beauty to wear;
Growing old gracefully,
Gracefully fair.

Far from the storms that are lashing the ocean,
Nearer each day to the pleasant home light;
Far from the waves that are big with commotion,
Under full sail, and the harbor in sight;
Growing old cheerfully,
Cheerful and bright.

Past all the winds that were adverse and chilling,
Past all the islands that lured thee to rest,
Past all the currents that lured thee unwillingly
Far from thy course to the land of the blest;
Growing old peacefully,
Peaceful and blest.

Never a feeling of envy or sorrow
When the bright faces of children are seen;
Never a year from the young wouldst thou borrow—
Thou doest remember what lieth between;
Growing old willingly,
Thankful, serene.

Rich in experience that angels might covet,
Rich in a faith that has grown with thy years,
Rich in a love that grew from and above it,
Soothing thy sorrows, and hushing thy fears;
Growing old wealthily,
Loving and dear.

Hearts at the sound of thy coming are lightened,
Ready and willing thy hand to relieve;
Many a face at thy kind word has brightened—
"It is more blessed to give than receive;"
Growing old happily,
Ceasing to grieve.

Eyes that grow dim to earth and its glory,
Have a sweet recompense that youth cannot know;
Ears that grow dull to the earth and its story,
Drink in the songs that from Paradise flow;
Growing old graciously,
Purer than snow.

FRIENDSHIP, OR LOVE.

Dick Raymond paused in his reading, and closed his book impatiently. "It is perfectly absurd," he said, "the way this writer, like many others, claims that no young lady and gentleman can become friends without being more. For my part, I don't know why there can't be friendship, just friendship, nothing else."

As he finished speaking a young girl at the other side of the room left her seat, crossed to where he was sitting, demurely offered her hand. In answer to his glance of surprise, "I agree with you," she said, gravely, "and I would like to shake hands on the subject.

This young person was Miss Edith Cartland, who had graduated from school some months before the opening of our story, and, as neither of her parents were living, she had come a few weeks back to make her home with her brother, Dr. Robert Cartland.

Possessing an independent spirit, she had immediately set herself about obtaining pupils in music and had been so successful as to number at present quite a class, and the pretty, dark-eyed teacher seemed to be well liked. She had found on her arrival at her brother's that there was one more member in the family than she had known of, and that was Richard Raymond, a brother of her brother's wife, and in business in that city.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Cartland were amused spectators of the scene described above: nothing was said on the subject, however, and the conversation soon became general on other subjects; but as they were separating for the night Dick said in a low tone, "So it is settled that we are to be friends, is it, Miss Edith?"

"I hope so," she said with a quick smile.

So a friendship began between them, concerning which the doctor and his wife shook their heads knowingly, prophesying that it would soon change to something different; but time passed on, and to their surprise they saw no change. As for the young people themselves, they appeared as contented with their friendship as they had said they should be when at the beginning they had declared that in their opinion it was far better than love, but each had promised that if anything of the latter should come to either, the other should be the first to be made acquainted with the fact.

The autumn changed to winter and winter to spring, when, one afternoon, as Edith was returning after a tedious day of lessons, and was about to enter the house, the postman handed her a letter for herself and she saw at a glance that it was from an old school friend, Rena Nelson.

The father of this young lady owned a handsome country seat where the family spent a part at least of every summer, and this letter contained an invitation for Edith to spend the coming months there with them.

"You needn't waste any time in making up your mind," wrote Rena, "for I shan't take no for an answer. I don't think you will find it so very dull, for besides some older people, Belle Briggs is to be here a few weeks and brother Tom and his chum, Fred Loring. So just say when we may expect you, and make blissfully happy the heart of your friend, Rena."

Edith's decision was soon made in favor of the visit, and when the day came for her departure Dick accompanied her to the depot.

"You'll write to me, won't you?" he asked just before the train started.

"Yes, of course," she returned. And write she did, but her letters to her sister were not more free and artless than those she wrote to Dick, and his in return were equally simple.

Rena, noticing these frequent missives, bantered her friend gaily upon the matter, but to her surprise Edith was indignant, and after this one occasion she remained wisely silent on the subject for the rest of her visit, which came to an end on the last of August.

The autumn months passed unmarked by any particular event, and it was on an evening during the following winter, when as the family were rising from a late tea, a servant announced:

"A gentleman to see Miss Cartland," and taking the card reached toward her, Edith was surprised to read the name of Fred Loring, her acquaintance of the summer previous.

He was stopping in the city for a few days, he said, when a little later Edith met him in the drawing room, and had given himself the pleasure of calling. His stay of a day or two lengthened to over a week, during which he called at Dr. Cartland's frequently; the last time Edith had gone out, so she did not see him.

It was a week or two after this when Mrs. Cartland noticed through the day that something unusual was troubling Edith, but as that young lady was one that spoke when she was ready and not before, she had said nothing to her about it. Dick, too, saw that something had gone wrong, but he waited with what patience he could summon, knowing that in all probability she would not keep it to herself much longer. Dr. and Mrs. Cartland went out for the evening, Edith had gone immediately to her room after tea, Dick was sitting with a paper apparently reading, but really wondering if she meant for him to spend the evening by himself, when he heard her coming down the stairs. She entered the room a moment later, but without glancing toward him went directly to the piano and began a lively waltz; indeed she began several selections without finishing any of them, while Dick sat watching her curiously, and was not surprised when turning suddenly she remarked in a very dejected tone:

"Oh, dear! what dreadful things do happen!"

"What now?" he asked, looking calmly up from his paper, "lost another pair of gloves, new hat unbecoming, or—"

"Richard Raymond!" Edith interrupted with surprising dignity, "such levity on your part is unbecoming, to say the least, in view of the subject on my mind."

"Your pardon, Miss Cartland, please proceed, I'm all attention."

She had a book of music in her hands, and turning the pages hurriedly back and forth, she said, "I have had a letter from Mr. Loring."

Dick repressed a smile and replied that he had known of even worse things than that to happen.

"But that isn't all," shutting the book with sudden emphasis, "he has asked me to marry him!"

For fully a minute Dick Raymond was dumb with astonishment. The thought of this had never occurred to him; when he recovered himself he said encouragingly:

"Well, it might be even worse than that—unless you have given him reason to expect a yes in reply," hesitatingly.

"You probably think it would be just like me."

Ignoring her last remark he went on: If not, my dear young friend, send him back a kind but decided no, and have the matter over with," and he settled himself back in his chair with the air of a man who considers that he has worked out a difficult problem.

"But you see," his companion remarked, again opening and shutting her book, "I'm not sure that my answer will be no. You remember that I promised to tell you if anything of the kind ever came to me and so I have, and I want your advice."

"Indeed, but since you have already decided, it would seem that my advice comes in a little late."

"Oh, I have not decided at all. I wish I had."

This with so doleful a tone and expression, that Dick said quickly, "if there's anything that I can say to help you, just tell me what it is and I'll say it."

He looked so whimsically in earnest that Edith laughed in spite of herself.

"Well," he said in a business-like manner, "do you love Mr. Loring?"

"Probably I shall never care for an man in just the way you mean," she replied, looking down, "but I like him. I imagine I shall never like any one any better, and it is pleasant to think I needn't be a poor music teacher all my life. There! despise me all you please."

Dick did not speak for several moments, and Edith was wondering if his contempt was too great for words, when he began:

"Of course if you marry him you and I cannot be the friends we have been."

She started. "I don't see why."

"Would you care to have your husband and another lady such friends as you and I have been? Hardly, I think."

She did not reply to this, but rising after a little silence said, "Good-night Dick," and left the room.

The young man looked after her with a variety of expressions as he twirled his blond moustache reflectively.

"What a dunce I've been," he soliloquized." "not to know that somebody would be falling in love with her sooner or later. "And so," after a pause, "she thinks she shall never like anybody better, does she!" He continued in this way for a while, and by the time he had finished found out something about himself that surprised him quite as much as what he had heard about Edith. The next morning, as he was standing before breakfast at a window looking on the street, he was struck by the sight of Edith, evidently out for a walk. It was not yet eight o'clock, and this young lady not being remarkable for early rising, it was no wonder he was surprised, but when he saw that her destination was the letter-box at the street corner, he began to understand.

As she returned and entered the room where he stood he did not turn from the window till she came up to him and said, "I have decided, Dick."

He turned then. "Shall I congratulate you?" he asked.

"Yes," smilingly; and then in a lower tone, "I have decided that I care more for your friendship than his love."

After this all seemed to go on as before, and one day in February Edith, having been out all the morning, came home looking unusually tired. Her sister remarked upon the fact, asking:

"What is the matter?"

"Only the same story over once more in my case," the girl returned. "If a pupil gets along nicely it is all in their wonderful talent, but if she don't learn readily the teacher is to blame. Now there is Bertha Williams—who, by the way, can't be tanght anything—told me to-day that she was so sorry to lose so agreeable a teacher, but pa thought, as she would sometime take lessons from Prof. Karl, it would be as well to change now, and Lu Davis will take of him if Bertha does, so there are two of my pupils gone." And Edith held up two fingers, looking mournfully at them as though she never expected to see them again. A little later Dick, who had been present during this recital, asked if she would be too tired tol isten to the Symphony orchestra that evening, and if his going had been anything of a hardship—which was far from being the case—he would have felt amply repaid by Edith's changed appearance.

As they were leaving the concert room after the evening's entertainment two young girls passed them, and Dick overheard the remarks, "there is Dick Raymond with Edith Cartland again. I wonder if they are engaged?"

"Probably," returned the other, "or if not they—"

The remainder of the sentence was lost, but the young man looked down at his companion to see if she too had heard, and by her flushed cheeks he was sure she had. She saw his questioning glance, however, and answered as though he had spoken.

"Never mind them, they don't understand."

Then came an evening, a week or two after this, when, as Edith and Dick had been conversing on different subjects, the latter said, with a sudden change of tone, "You remember, Edith, of the agreement we made that, should anything of love come to either of us we should tell the other. You have kept your part of the promise, and now I have something to tell."

If he had observed that he confidently expected to be the next president of the United States Edith would hardly have been more surprised.

"Dick Raymond," she said slowly, "do you mean to say that you are in love?"

"Yes, if you like to put it in that way," he said, apparently enjoying her surprise.

"Well!" she exclaimed, "I did think I knew one sensible man—but they are all alike!"

As she seemed to be addressing the center table, Dick did not feel called upon to reply, but after a pause he said, "I am sorry to lower myself in your opinion, but the lady I love is no common person; she—"

"There!" Edith broke in. "You can leave me to imagine the rest, for I have heard how people in your condition usually talk, and—"

"Will therefore save me from sinking lower in your esteem than I already am. Thank you," finished Dick.

There was silence for several minutes till he spoke again. "May I tell you who she is, Edith?" he asked.

This disturbed young lady wondered instinctively if he spoke in that tone when addressing that uncommon person, but before she had time to reply Mrs. Cartland entered the room, and so interrupted their conversation.

At an earlier hour than usual Edith made some excuses and went to her room. As she stood there brushing her dark hair she paused suddenly, and looking severely at her reflection in the mirror, exclaimed softly, "Edith Cartland, what do you mean? Is it possible you care so much more for him than he does for you?" And then thinking of what she had said, "How foolish, how like a child she acted," she thought, her eyes filling with tears of vexation or something else. But she would be different when he saw her again. And the following morning she was so much like her usual self that Dick was surprised, if not a little disappointed.

There was no opportunity of resuming their conversation till late in the afternoon, when, as Edith was walking slowly homewark, Dick overtook her and they went on together, speaking little at first, and they had nearly reached their own door when he said:

"We were interrupted last evening: shall I finish now what I have to tell you?"

"Certainly," was the answer; "your friend is interested, of course," adding that if he had found something better than friendship he was fortunate, but she—naturally—should miss her friend. They had reached the door, but by a tacit agreement paused before entering, while Dick returned, "I, too, should be sorry to give up my friend if it were not for the hope of gaining something better."

How unlike him, how almost cruel this sounded. But he should not know that she cared, and with an effort at her old tone she said, "Won't you tell me who she is?"

If it had been light enough to have seen his face she would not have put the question, but the short day was drawing to a close, and the gaslight did not fall where they stood.

"Edith," he said, taking both her hands, "do you need to ask? Don't you know who she must be?"

When their engagement became known Dr. and Mrs. Cartland felt that this was too good an opportunity not to say, "I told you so," but with an effort they contented themselves with saying it to each other, and all concerned and interested seemed to be entirely satisfied with the termination of this remarkable friendship.

Take the Sunny Side.

Let's oftener talk of nobler deeds
And rarer of the bad ones,
And sing about our happy days,
And not about the sad ones.

We are not made to fret and sigh
And when grief sleeps to wake it,
Bright happiness is standing by,
This life is what we make it.

Let's find the sunny side of men
Or be believers in it;
A light there is in every soul
That takes the pains to win it.

Oh! there is slumbering good in all,
And we perchance may wake it;
Our hands contain the magic wand;
This life is what we make it.

Then here's to those whose loving hearts
Shed light and joy about them!
Thanks be to them for countless gems
We ne'er had known without them.

Oh! this should be a happy world
To all who may partake it;
The fault's our own if it is not—
This life is what we make it.

A PERIL TO OUR HOMES.

Our safety as a people pivots on the sanctity of our homes. The sanctity of our homes can be guarded only by intelligent and unremitting watchfulness. A present peril to our homes which is liable to be overlooked, but which can hardly be overestimated in its possibilities of evil, is in the average daily newspaper of our American cities. That peril needs to be recognized as a peril in order that its perilous consequences may in some way be averted.

Again and again the Christian public sentiment of this country has been aroused against some special form of evil agency for the misleading of the young, and for the debauching of the moral sense of the community. Dime novels, obscene books and prints, sensational "flash" newspapers, and exceptionally indecent theatrical shows, have in turn come under the ban of the better class of well-disposed citizens, and are now stigmatized as moral nuisances—even if still unabated—to be dreaded and shunned by those who would keep themselves and their loved ones pure. But to-day the average daily newspaper of our larger cities is even more pernicious in its influence than any or all of those agencies of impurity, in its disgusting details of crime and of shameful conduct, displayed conspicuously and offensively before its ordinary readers. Indeed, there is, perhaps, at the present time, no more insidious and effective a destroyer of the innocent purity of the average Christian home than the average daily newspaper, which brings its vile contents to the sight of many who have not been warned against its obnoxious features.

Of course, not all city dailies conform to the standard of the average city daily. There are daily papers in our larger cities, the contents of which are scrupulously guarded with a view to the purity of the homes they enter. These are honorable exceptions to the ordinary rule. They do not need to be mentioned by name, any more than do the papers of the opposite extreme. Any intellent observer can see for himself to which class belongs any paper into which he looks but casually. But the objectionable papers do include many which are of an extended circulation, of large political influence, and which are edited with conspicuous ability. All this, however, makes them only the more dangerous to the home; because it gives them a good name, and a standing calculated to disarm suspicion as to their pernicious influence.

It is not that the newspapers make necessary mention of crimes and of other evil doings in their reeords of the events of the passing time. There would be no special exception taken to this course. But it is that they give an undue and an unseemly prominence to the sensational display of the disgusting details of foul crimes and of indulgings in vice, where no good object is thereby to be gained and where the only apparent purpose is the pandering to a depraved taste and a prurient curiosity. To such an extent is this unworthy practice now carried that some of the more "enterprising" city dailies expend money freely in order to lay before their readers every morning the latest disclosures of some criminal scandal or some infamous divorce trial, in the courts beyond the sea; expanding in their columns the specific portraiture of obscene transactions and the explicit narration of shameless words and ways, which are utterly beyond the limits of common decency, and which no pretence can bring within the bounds of reputable journalism. This evil is seemingly on the increase; and it is already a question whether any details of vice could be sufficiently foul and abhorrent to insure the exclusion of their full description from the pages of the average city daily.

The specious apology which the culpable editors make for this indecent display of disgusting details of vice and crime in their columns is that their readers are interested in the obscenity thus presented; and that it is supplied, not because the editors deem it fit to be read, but because the readers have sufficiently low tastes to be gratified with its loathesomeness. This plea is, of course, only an aggravation of the offense itself; for it is an implied admission of the editor's willingness to prostitute his powers and position to the demands of the populace, regardless of the right or wrong of those demands. It suggests a readiness to do what is found to be profitable rather than what is known to be right. A similar plea to this is put forth in behalf of every form of evildoing. The vilest panderers to human lust have the only excuse of ministering to those who want to be ministered to in that way. No man is worthy to be editor of any sheet whatsoever who has no higher standard of right than the depraved morals and tastes of the more viciously inclined of its readers. And editor ought to be an educator of the community, and a leader in good; not a pupil of vice, and a follower of evil. He who says he will give a place in his columns to whatever details of indecency his readers will tolerate and enjoy is confessedly unfit to be an editor, and is deserving of the reprehension and contempt of the well-disposed in the community.

The evil of this daily newspaper pollution needs to be recognized as an evil, in order that something be done in the direction guarding against its extension into our better regulated Christian homes; even if it cannot yet be suppressed as an evil, action toward restraining it might, indeed, very properly be initiated by the society for the Suppression of Vice. If additional legislation be needed in order to secure this restraining, steps toward the required enactments should be speedily taken. Meanwhile there should be no question about the position which every person of common decency and fair morality takes with reference to this chiefest peril to our homes today.

There is one thing that every intelligent Christian man can do, and ought to do in this emergency; and that is to keep out of his home every newspaper the contents of which are calculated to defile the mind and pollute the sense of the purest members of his household. No matter how prominent the paper may be, or how much ability be displayed in its management, if it be one of these foul and filthy sheets, let him shut it from his house as he would the germs of a pestilence, or the fumes of an uncleaned sewer. It would be better to live and die without the news of the day than to find the news only in a paper which is shamelessly edited, and which would force before the pure mind of an unsuspicious reader the abhorant details of vile sayings and doings which ought not so much as to be named among persons of common decency.

If the average city editor will load his columns with all the filth which he finds his readers are disposed to tolerate, see to it that he has no countenance from your support. Shut your eyes against his columns, and shut your home-door against his newspaper. Anything short of this, is short of your personal duty in the premises.—Sunday School Times.

RISK SHARING.

Profit sharing that merely offers a bonus addition to wages as a premium on high efficiency, though usually an excellent thing as far as it goes, is, in our judgement, only a half way measure. Profit sharing should develop into full industrial partnership, involving risk and loss sharing. This it accomplished by converting the dividends to labor into shares of capital stock instead of paying them out in money. The most perfect example of such an arrangement is that built up by M. Godin at Guise, in France. The employes who enter its service in youth become its owners in age. As they die or droop out, their shares are bought in by the corporation to be gradually transferred to the new generation. Every worker acquires, year by year, an increasing stake in the permanent prosperity of the business. A worker who proves unfit to share in these privileges is not wanted, and does not stay long.

It is time that attention were sharply called to the superlative importance of risk sharing by the wage earning population. It is the fact that so large a proportion of this population has no concrete and definite property stake in the stabilily of society and the prosperity of business, that constitutes the greatest social danger. It is proper to study the ways and means by which to increase the income of this class, but the effort must not stop here. It is even more essential to increase the workingmen's sense of responsibility. Wages have been rising for over a half a century, but the natural connection between labor and ownership is the means by which labor is made effective, has been severed in the larger manufacturing industries. This connection was a very real one in the days when it was possible for any workman of good parts to become the owner of a shop. It is still a real one, most fortunately, in the agricultural industries of the countries, where working farmers own the land. There is no other defense against socialistic radicalism in France or the United States to-day, than this very fact that throughout the agricultural population the interests of capital and labor are to a great extent identified in a normal way. Under existing industrial conditions, there is no way in which this identity can be reëstablished in the manufacturing, mining and transportation industries than by the industrial partnership; which transfers to the workers a portion of the ownership and management, risks and profits, in proportion to their moral qualities and capacities, much to those of ten talents, little to those of one, but some even to them. Let us then have profit sharing as far as possible, but by all means let it be carried to its logical consequence in risk sharing. It is a dangerous social condition when any part of the community is absolved from or deprived of its due proportion of the responsibilities that should rest on all.—Work and Wages.

ONE KIND OF LUCK.

"Charming girl, that Miss Rockwood."

"Yes, she's rather nice."

"I don't think I ever met any one who could be more charmingly entertaining."

"You seem to be rather smitten with her, Robert."

"Yes, I admire her exceedingly. Lucky thing I didn't see her before I married you, my dear."

"Yes, it's rather lucky—for her."—Tid Bits.

In London, not long since, a saintly individual tried to offer up a prayer at a meeting of his creditors. Among the latter was a rough Scotchman who, amazed at the coolness of the act, shouted, "Sit doon, ye rascally heepocreet! If ye say anither wurd to the Almiety in my presence dom me if I dinna kick ye." The creditors roared, the petitioner sat down, and the business of the meeting proceeded.

CONGRESS is apparently wholly given over to all sorts of pension folly, neither party daring to oppose the wildest schemes in this line. At the rate things are going all who lived in war times may be on the lookout for a pension before long.

O'NEILL, another of the "boodle" aldermen of New York, has been found guilty, and will soon join his friends at Sing Sing. Thirteen of the interesting crowd have now been disposed of in one way or another, leaving nine members of the board yet to be brought to justice.

THE Democrats in the New York Assembly do not take any civil service reform in theirs. They voted to a man, the other day, in favor of a bill to repeal all the state civil service laws, while the Republicans opposed it with equal unanimity. Straws show the true inwardness of things sometimes.

NEW YORK banks are displaying quite a disposition to secure the services of prominent officials from Washington as their managers. It is asserted that Secretary Manning will resign some time next month to accept the $15,000 presidency of the New York bank to which Treasurer Jordan is going. Assistant Secretary Fairchild is named as his probable successor in the cabinet.

THE climax of folly seems to have been reached in the case of Nina Van Zandt's infatuation for August Spies, the convicted Chicago anarchist. It appears that she has not come to her senses, as recently reported, but on the contrary they were married by proxy last Saturday, Spies being represented on the interesting occasion by his brother. It is difficult to understand how such idiotic nonsense can be countenanced or endured in a civilized community. Spies's brother, who is already married, has been arrested on the charge of bigamy, in order to test the legality of the ceremony.

THE boot and shoe manufacturers of Worcester county have come to the conclusion that they will run their own business, without dictations from their employes, and notices have been posted in the shops throughout the county announcing that they will be opened hereafter only to such operatives as wish to deal individually with the proprietors. The employes have gone out, of course, but the line is now clearly drawn. Either the manufacturers or the workmen must yield, and the former are firm in their determination to fight it out on this line to the bitter end, their feeling being well expressed by Mr. Burt of the Brookfield shops, who says:

> We have borne a good deal from the effrontry and persistency of the labor organizations. If my men want to come to me for employment they know full well that they will be well treated. But it is time to find out who is running Burt's shoe factory; and if I can't have my men without treating with outside men whom I never saw before; if I cannot discharge the incompetent and the mischief-makers, or make terms with the deserving, I shall keep that shop shut till I can.

The 10th annual exhibition of paintings at the art galleries of James D. Gill of Springfield is now open, and promises to be the best, as it is the largest, of the series. There are 150 paintings by 108 artists, at prices ranging from $50 to $2500, the list including many of the leading artists of the country. Mr. Gill has done much to cultivate the artistic taste of this section of the state, and his exhibitions already equal the best in the large cities. The galleries will be open through this month.

J., has been released after an imprisonment of five years, for technical illegalities in his sentence. Hoke, the Peoria, Ill., defaulter, now in Montreal, is to be extradited.

Congressman Reagan of Texas has been elected United States senator. He was in Congress before the war, served as Confederate postmaster general during the Rebellion, and has been back in Congress since 1875. The passage of the interstate commerce bill is due to his agitation.

Probably none of the secret societies of the town grow so rapidly as does Quaboag Council No. 876, Royal Arcanum. Starting two years ago with about a dozen members, its numbers have now increased to nearly 75, and new members are admitted at almost every meeting. It is a very safe and cheap method of insurance.

A young man left his coat to be repaired at Munger's tailor shop yesterday, and asked for one to wear while his was being mended. Accordingly a meeting is to be held at Thorndike next Thursday evening to organize a prohibition league, and form a plan for the work.

A former resident of Palmer, now in California, writes: "My wife thinks we cannot run the machinery out here, even in this sunny clime, without the PALMER JOURNAL. It is indeed a welcome visitor." Monday evening "Lucretia Borgia" will be given, and Tuesday evening "Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots."

The Christian Endeavor convention at Northampton, Wednesday, was a grand success in spite of the heavy snow storm. Some 300 delegates were present from the various societies in Western Massachusetts. About a dozen five-minute addresses and papers on the work of the various committees was the leading feature of the morning, and showed that these young Christians are fully alive to the wants of the times, and propose to do all they can to make the world better. Following these papers came minute reports from 45 different societies. The afternoon was occupied with addresses upon "What the Y. P. S. C. E. Proposes to Do," "The Prayer Meeting," and "Keeping the Pledge." The meeting as a whole was one of great interest. Many persons were present who came to study the movement, and who went home fully decided to introduce it into their churches. The Endeavor Society of Palmer sent seven delegates, three of whom were appointed to give a written report of the convention at an early meeting.

The first note in the no license campaign was struck in Palmer Wednesday evening, when Rev. Hugh Montgomery of Worcester gave a talk of more than ordinary interest upon the temperance question, at St. Paul's church. The substance of the lecture was drawn almost wholly from the lecturer's own experience in the enforcement of the state liquor law. From statistics gathered in his own field Mr. Montgomery showed that the liquor power is relatively strong neither in money nor in votes, contrary to the general thought, and that the great temperate masses have only to rise as a substantial unit, and the victory is theirs. Some time was devoted to a destructive analysis of the liquor law, and an earnest plea was entered in the name of the 400,000 drunkard's homes, for the speedy ending of the rum traffic. The speaker drew some thrilling, some heart-breaking pictures from real life as he had seen it. In conclusion Mr. Montgomery sketched briefly the formation of the state no-license league, its objects and methods of work, and revealed himself as an agent of this organization. He strongly urged the formation of a local branch in Palmer, and predicted early and complete success flowing from the organized efforts now being put forth in the temperance cause.

BRIMFIELD.

In the death of George H. Upham, Brimfield loses one of her citizens who will be very much missed, born here in 1814. About 1822, on the death of their mother, when less than 8 years old, he and a younger sister, the late Mrs. N. F. Rogers, were taken and cared for by the late Thomas Hubbard, Sr., where they remained and made it their home until years after they became of age. About 1850 Mr. Upham located in the centre of the town, working at house painting, and its attendant branches. But he did not confine himself to this kind of work; he was quite ingenious, and was always ready to undertake almost any small job of repairing that was presented, seemingly taking more satisfaction in doing the work than in the amount received therefor. He was much interested in ancient and peculiar articles, and his shop was quite a museum. He was a frequent attendant at auctions, where he found many articles to add to his collection. In the exhibitions of the Hitchcock high school and entertainments of like character he was always interested, and ready to assist in preparing costumes and, the many articles used on such occasions. Of an even temperament, though somewhat peculiar, by his quiet and unobtrusive ways and his willingness to lend a helping hand wherever needed, he made friends of all. He never married, and leaves a half brother and sister, residents of Michigan, with no other relatives nearer than one first and several second cousins. His funeral at the town hall on Wednesday was attended by many, the services being conducted by Rev. W. H. Pierce. The casket was handsomely decorated with flowers, the gift of resident friends.

There was a social gathering at the high school building Wednesday evening, that all desirous of seeing the work which has been done of late might have an opportunity for so doing. Quite a goodly number were present of both sex, and all were pleased with the improvements. Henry Hoag, the contractor, has shown a great deal of taste in the construction. Rev. P. W. Lyman gave an address, and the juvenile orchestra, which was present, rendered some quite fine music. Mr. Hoag presented Miss Shannon, the leader of the orchestra, with a sum of money to be divided among the musicians, five in number. Several of our townsmen made appropriate remarks, and the ladies were invited to but declined. All enjoyed a nice time. REPORT OF REV. MR. BYINGTON'S INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

The gossips in this quiet hill-town have practically held a regular carnival in scandal-gathering since the development of the alleged matrimonial engagements of Rev. E. H. Byington. By the investigating committee's searching efforts in looking up the matter, it may be stated, without a doubt, that they have surely won their title.

The church committee, by invitation of Miss Reed, called at her residence one evening recently, and she related to them her side of the story. She told the committee, so say responsible parties, that she really intended to become the clergyman's wife upon his return from Europe, and also read a letter to the committee which was received from Mr. Byington. From this document many secrets were revealed, but nothing concerning it was made public. The clergyman asserts that his final proposition of matrimony made to Miss Reed was virtually rejected, and that all courtship between them ceased at that time. It is also authoritatively alleged that since the engagement of Pastor Byington to Miss Lulu Workman of Worcester, Miss Reed has evidently been somewhat grieved over the matter. Pastor Byington, upon learning of Miss Reed's grief, thought it advisable to look into the matter, and called at the residence of some of his parishioners, who advised him the right course to pursue, so says a deacon of that church. However, it is quite generally conceded that the trouble between Mr. Byington and Miss Reed will never be entirely adjusted, and so Miss Reed, accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Horatio Lyon, has departed, to escape the annoyance of local gossipers, who have incessantly agitated the matter for several weeks. The deacons, it is understood, have repeatedly asked their pastor to resign, thinking it for the best interests of the church and people, but Mr. Byington declined to comply with their wishes, and stated that he did not propose to leave until all matters could be settled satisfactory to the parties involved.

Yesterday was assigned as the time for the church committee, deacons and ecclesiastical council to assemble, and at 10 o'clock a. m. a secret session was held at the clergyman's study, the council being made up as follows: Rev. Dr. Plumb of Boston Highlands, Rev. Dr. S. G. Buckingham, Rev. Dr. T. H. Hawks, Rev. Michael Burnham and Charles Marsh, all of Springfield; Rev. John H. Lockwood of Westfield and Edward W. Chapin of Holyoke. At this hearing Miss Reed was not present, neither did she send a representative, and the whole matter was agitated without opposition. The testimony relative to the clergyman's conduct was heard, and a special committee of seven were chosen to definitely determine whether Mr. Byington should be exonorated or not. As the first session was a prolonged one lasting nearly five hours, the committee took a short recess, and in the meantime a collation was provided at the Cushman House. Subsequently the special committee re-assembled to act upon the matter, and late last evening the following decision was rendered:

The undersigned, called by the pastor and standing committee of the Congregational church in Monson, Mass., to investigate a charge which is said to have been publicly made, to the effect that the pastor has violated an engagement of marriage, or an understanding which was equivalent to an engagement, assembled at the parsonage of said church on February 3d, 1887. They listened to statements by members of the standing committee and by Mr. Byington; also to letters written by him, and to testimony, written and oral, concerning statements made by parties in the case, and reached unanimously the following result:

They deeply deplore the existing misunderstandings, and desire to express their sincere sympathy with those who are most deeply affected by the occurances which have taken place. They find, however, that there never was any mutual engagement of marriage, expressed or implied, between the parties involved. Moreover, they are fully of the opinion that whatever misunderstanding may have arisen between the parties, due to errors of judgment, Mr. Byington has acted with entire truthfulness, and has been controlled by a high sense of honor.

At the meeting of the council the deacons and standing committee were seen. At the hearing one of the standing committee said that many letters written by Mr. Byington to Miss Reed were read by him in the presence of the council, but none of Miss Reed's letters were made known, as it is understood that they had been destroyed some time ago. It is further alleged that the letters contained words of affection. The church committee made no further charges at the hearing yesterday, but simply desired that the matter should be adjusted satisfactorily to them.

CARD.—To our many frends that visited us on our anniversary evening, please except our heartfelt thanks for your presents and kind remembrances you left with us.

MR. AND MRS. GEO. W. RANDALL.

The Chinese minister at Washington must have been deeply impressed by the exhibition of Western civilization at his recent party. Four hundred people were invited, but fully a thousand invaded his premises, men and women made a disgusting scramble for refreshments, and the banquet table was swept clean several times.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, FEB. 2d, 1887.

Another attempt will be made this year to reduce the legal standard of milk. Senator Glines of Middlesex introduced in the Senate Thursday an order that the committee on agriculture consider the expediency of reducing the standard from 13 per cent of solids to 12. It also proposes that no man convicted of selling adulterated milk shall be fined over $20, unless it can be proved that he committed the adulteration knowingly, and that if milk inspectors intend to prosecute, they must give notice of their intention within five days of taking the samples. Mr. Stockwell of Buckland put in an order regarding the adulteration of sugar and syrup, presumably maple, as he is from a maple sugar territory.

The committee on election laws is expected to report that the constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax as a suffrage qualification ought to pass. It went through both branches last year with but little opposition.

The House adopted unanimously without debate, Thursday, the Senate resolutions asking for retaliation against Canada in consequence of her treatment of American fishermen.

Senator Jefts of Middlesex has introduced an order directing the liquor committee to consider the expediency of prohibiting the exercise of liquor licenses within half a mile of the limits of cities or towns which vote no license.

At a conference of Republican senators in President Boardman's room after adjournment on Friday, it was decided to support, as a Republican measure, the resolution for a constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax as a suffrage qualification. The senators also decided that the Republican party ought to get the credit for whatever labor legislation is passed this year, and not allow it, by default, to go to the Democrats.

The Boston and Maine railroad has put in a petition for authority to buy the franchise and property of the Eastern railroad and of all the roads which are operated by the Eastern.

A bill on leave by Representative Dresser of Medford proposes a convention for next August to revise the constitution of the state.

Senator Jefts of Middlesex introduced on leave in the Senate Friday a most stringent bill against the liquor dealers. It probably comes from the Law and Order League, and hedges the liquor sellers on all sides. It puts up the license fee to a minimum of $500, except in Boston, where it is $1000. forbids liquor sellers to sit on juries at the trial of liquor cases, says that women and minors shall in no way be employed about saloons, and proposes many other restrictions.

If the liquor business is not suppressed by legislation it will not be the fault of the temperance men. All sorts of measures have been introduced to check in every possible way the sale of liquor. Among the propositions are these: That the display of any sign, placard or bottle with any liquor label on it, or the posting of a United States tax receipt, shall be prima facia evidence to convict of sales; to allow the abuttor's objection to a license to apply to all who have premises within 25 feet of the estate where it is desired to sell liquor; to regulate by law the sale of non-intoxicating liquors, as well as intoxicating. There are many other attempts to shut down on the liquor dealers, and, even if the prohibitory constitutional amendment is defeated, there will be opportunity enough in other ways to harass the liquor sellers.

Wednesday was the last day for introducing new business, and the House beat the record of all previous Legislatures in the volume of business introduced. Tuesday was an unusually heavy day, but Wednesday's record showed 108 orders, 89 petitions and some smaller matters. The Senate was not nearly as prolific in business, but it came nearer to the House than it generally does. It is a little singular that nothing has been put in this year in regard to biennial state elections or biennial sessions of the Legislature, but it seems to have slipped the minds of its advocates, or they have become discouraged. At any rate it is too late now. This is the first year since 1874 that the matter was not up.

The state board of agriculture has been holding its sessions this week in the Commonwealth building, and voted Wednesday to hold its next county meeting in Springfield on Dec. 6.

An attempt is on foot by some of the Boston Republican leaders to get at the inside of the Democratic management, or mismanagement, of Boston city affairs. Consequently an order has been put in for a sweeping investigation in the several departments of the city government, and especially into the charges made by the Boston Daily Advertiser. The order was laid over at the request of Senator Dwyer of Suffolk, an independent Democrat who, personally, has a pretty clean record.

People who love music will have an interest in a petition presented Wednesday signed by ex-Govs. Rice, Robinson, Long and Gaston, and a lot of musical people of the state, asking for a state normal school to give instruction in music, according to Gov. Ames's recommendation.

One of the orders presented Wednesday proposes to abolish the state gas commission. This is one of the latest created commissions, and it is a common opinion that it is neither ornamental nor useful, and was established merely in the interest of the old gas companies as against the public. It is proposed to legalize the sale of newspapers which are issued on Sunday or Monday, and the city of Boston has in a strong petition for a change in the Sunday laws to adapt them to the social, moral and business needs of the time. One member would like to have the legislative session begin earlier in the year, and another wants to have all taxes assessed January 1 instead of May 1. Another wants double pay given for Sunday work, and another would increase the field for savings banks investments. So it goes, and the mass of new business is altogether too much for prompt digestion. LANDON.

"How Husbands Should Treat Their Wives" will be the subject of a sensible and humurous illustrated article in the next SUNDAY GLOBE, by James W. Clark.

All medical authorities agree that catarrh is no more nor less than an inflammation of the lining membrane of the nasal air passages. Nasal catarrh and all catarrhal affections of the head are not diseases of the blood, and it is a serious mistake to treat them as such. No conscientious physician ever attempts to do so. It is held by eminent medical men that sooner or later a specific will be found for every disease from which humanity suffers. The facts justify us in assuming that for catarrh at least a positive cure already exists in Ety's Cream Balm.

WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures dysentery and diarrhoea, regulates the stomach and bowels, cures colic, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING is pleasant to the taste, and is the perscription of one of the oldest and best female nurses and physicians in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price 25c. a bottle. 1y31

POND'S EXTRACT. Used alike by the medical profession and the people, it holds a position held by no other medicine in this country, or, perhaps, the world. Beware of imitations weak and sour.

CHIPMAN'S PILLS purify the blood, increase the appetite, make you feel new. A positive cure for Sick Headache, Malaria and Dyspepsia. Try them. For sale by all druggists. 1y27

THE USUAL TREATMENT of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands of despairing patients can testify. On this point a trustworthy medical writer says: "Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but many, if not most, of the remedies in general use by physicians afford but temporary benefit. A cure certainly cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes." Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy which combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient. 2w42

When it Snows.

Oh, the winter's got around!
How it blows!
And last night the muddy ground
Went and froze,
And the windows frosted white,
And the water pipes are tight;
We don't care a single mite—
For it snows!

See the leafless, lonesome trees,
Black as crows;
But the fire that toasts our knees
Cracks and glows;
Where's the pop-corn? Fill your hat;
Bring the apples, red and fat,
They come in quite nice and pat
When it snows.

Put your hood on, with its blue
Strings and bows;
Wear your red mittens, too;
Wrap your nose
With your muffler round about;
Get the old green bob-sleigh out;
Sing and whistle, laugh and shout—
For it snows!

Get a soapstone and a brick
For your toes;
Tuck the robe in warm and thick—
Then here goes,
Spinning, scooting, fast and free,
Bells a-jingling joyfully;
Oh, it's jolly as can be
When it snows!

NEVER READ HOSEA BIGLOW.

An Adirondack guide asked a Boston man in the woods if he knew Lowell.

"What's his first name?"

"Jim."

"Do you refer to James Russell Lowell, the poet?"

"Yes, that's him."

"O, yes, I know him very well, and admire him greatly."

"Well, I took to him, too, but (with regret in his tone) he's got one mighty sing'lar habit."

"What's that?"

"Well, he's written me several letters, off and on, when he's been comin' up here, and he's a monstrous speller."

"A what?"

"A monstrous speller. I've always notice that in his letters to me Lowell spells his words the same way ev'ry time—I never do."

THE LETTER OF THE LAW.

Pat was a fresh arrival and had obtained a situation in a hotel as a sort of man of all work.

"Now, Pat," said the landlord, "you see that sign, 'Gentlemen must use the spittoons.' If you notice any of the guests violating that rule I want you to report the matter to me."

"Oi wull, sor."

Pat kept a sharp lookout, and after watching a gentleman for half an hour he went to him and said: "D'ye moind the soign forninst the wall, sor?"

"Yes."

"Why don't you observe it thin?"

"I am not spitting on the carpet," said the gentleman, rather astonished.

"Oi knaw yer not, an' yer not usin' the spittune, nayther. Spet, ye thafe, or Oi'll report yez."

SHE SAW SNAKES.—One cold day John Simmons, of Holiday, Ho., threw on to his fire-place for a back-log a large unsplit oak stick. The piece had laid for a long time on the wood pile, but with the exception of a small hole in a decayed knot on one side of the stick, it was to all appearances perfectly sound. Simons and his wife sat in front of the fire-place, and soon after the stick had been thrown on, Mrs. Simons startled her husband with a loud scream and jumped quickly on a chair, pointing excitedly at the back log. Simons looked, and to his astonishment saw a snake coming out of the hole in the knot, which was on the upper side of the stick. The log had not begun to blaze up, and the snake made its escape uninjured into the room and squirmed across it to a corner, where it coiled itself up. It was quickly followed by two other snakes, which also got away from their imperiled wintering place in safety. They were all rattlesnakes of good size, and the heat had warmed them into all their normal liveliness and activity. Simons killed the three snakes with a pair of tongs. They had twenty-one rattles among them.

"Father," asked Rollo, "why is the snow so light?" "Because," replied Rollo's father, "it comes down." "But light things," said Rollo, "go up." "Eider way," replied the father, "it is the same thing. That is what keeps you on you feet; the lightest part of you keeps you up." "But then," persisted Rollo, "how do light things ever come down?" "This way," said Rollo's father, patiently, doubling a light shawl strap and bringing it down heavily upon the broad brow of his son's back, and Rollo after thanking his father inaudibly, went to bed to conceal his emotion. "Some time," said Rollo, "I will learn to close the cross-examination before the prosecuting witness loses his temper."—Burdette, in Brookly Eagle.

"Come in, my poor man," said a benevolent lady to a ragged tramp, "and I will get you something to eat."

"Thanky, mum; don't care if I do."

"I suppose," continued the lady, setting a square meal before him, "your life has been full of trials?"

"Yis, mum; an' the wust of it wuz I allus got convicted."—Judge.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is a scrofulous disease of the lungs—therefore use the great anti-scrofula or blood purifier and strength-restorer—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's Treatise on Consumption, send 10 cents in stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

From Hon. E. L. Freeman, Editor of Weekly Visitor, Central Falls, R. I.—"Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer has been used by me personally and in my family with the most satisfactory results. I regard it as the best remedy possible for the purposes it is recommended for, with which I am acquainted." For sale by all druggists. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1 per bottle.

Mothers, always use Dr. Seth Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial for children. A mild, safe tonic. 25 cents.

FROM A YOUNG WIFE'S DIARY.

George said last week that we must economize, for trade seemed to be paralyzed. It is funny that trade should have waited until we got married and then get parayized. But we must do all we can, George says, to save money. I am trying every day to save what he makes. For three days I have been making my husband a pair of the cutest nightshirts that anybody ever saw. They are long and graceful, and trimmed with pink embroidery. George put one of them on last night, and we had our first harsh words.

At first he laughed a low, bitter laugh, such as we sometimes hear on the stage when the villain sticks a large red stab knife into a casual acquaintance.

I did not think that my own George would ever curdle my young blood with such a low gurgling laugh. For a few moments I yearned for my mother's bosom to moan on, but it was useless to moan.

George said that anybody with brains enough to soil a silk handkerchief ought to know that the buttons should be on the right hand side, and that three pockets in a night shirt were moonshine.

Then he buckled a shawl-strap around himself, and pretended to be Sitting Bull, but I would not laugh at him. It was the first time that I had ever refused to laugh at anything George expected me to laugh at. Can he ever forgive? Oh, can he ever forgive? I threw myself on the bed and wept till the pillow shams were a sight to behold.

I also made a mistake in putting in the sleeves, so that they pointed back into the dim past. George said he felt all the time as if he had been turned around in a cyclone, and that while he was struggling to peer into the future his arms were striving to lay hold on the dear, dead past.

He can be quite eloquent when he feels like it, and his employer says he is the most brilliant conversationalist they have at the barber shop.

I can now see that if I had put in more time at home in learning to sew and cook, and less time on my voice it would have been better for George.

Papa spent a good deal of money teaching me to go up and down the scale, and how to sing sad pieces with a tremolo in them, but the buttonholes that I make, George says, look like the eye of a dead hog. I think parents are apt to make a mistake in the estimate they place on their children. For instance, papa would never sing anything but "My Poor Nellie Gray," and if mamma could sing anything she did it under an assumed name, for I never heard her. Well, when I began to sing, and people could discover what tune it was, my parents began to squander money on my alleged voice. I always knew I couldn't sing, but here I am with a trunk full of sheet music, no piano, and a faculty for making a pie that would lead a man to the gallows.

I also know how to elocute some, but that does not keep us now. What does a poor man want of a wife who can recite "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-night," and who cannot throw any hope into a low-spirited hunk of bread.

I see it all now, oh, so plainly, and so does George, I fear. I can understand how he feels, exactly. He may be a rich man some day, if he don't die of dyspepsia before he amasses a fortune, and all the time I must practice on some one. Poor George!

Yesterday I bought a little red receipt book from a pleasing young man who called at the door. His eyes were so deep and dark, and his voice so pleading, that I would have purchased the book if I had had to borrow the money. The book is a very useful one, and is bound in the same color as my new dog.

It tells how to make custards, blanc manges and floating Island. It also tells you in the back part how to cure heaves, glanders and botts. I can hardly wait till George gets the botts so that I can bring out my little red book and win him back to life and joy again. It also gives away other information. Any one with this book in the house can go to work and take a person right through a long seige of croup or yellow fever without a doctor, and there is a whole lot of law in it, so that George won't have to have a lawyer or a doctor, and we can save a great deal that way. Why will people fritter away their money on doctors and lawyers when they can get one of these books so cheap.

Yesterday our landlady gave me a slip of oleander, and I have planted it in a cute little pitcher in the window: there it is slowly growing as I write. It seems hardly possible that some day it will be a large tree with little yellow knobs on it. I can fancy George, as he will look ten or fifteen years from now, with a bald pate on the back of his head, and lifting and surging on that oleander till he is black in the face and his eyes start from their sockets. Will it not be a joyful time?

In fancy I stand at the head of the cellar stairs and make suggestions about where to set it, while George rests one end of it on his person and moans.

With a good oleander in our home I feel that we may gradually accumulate quite a little property. If George will only put the same zeal and industry into our home life, and try to econmize, we may some day be very, very comfortable.

There ought to be an exchange in every community for the sale of misfit Christmas presents.—Burlington Free Press.

RHEUMATISM

Is a disease in the Blood and must be treated with internal remedies. It has been cured nine times out of ten by the use of

BROWN'S

SALICYLINE!

Manufactured by F. M. Brown & Co., 224 West Water street, Elmira, N. Y. Sold be all druggists, 50 cents a bottle. 3m43

WHAT IS SCROFULA?

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, proves itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. Send for book of cures.

A City Courtship.

The proper place for courting,
By the story-book's reporting,
Is some lane or meadow-pathway, out of sight of town,
With the sweetness blowing over
From the fields of beans and clover,
And the skylark dropping nestward as the sun goes down.

But I've met my little Sally
At the mouth of Dawson's alley,
And we've walked along together tow'rd the dome of St. Paul's,
'Mid the jostling crowd that passes
'Neath the flaring lamps and gases,
And the shouting of the drivers and the newsboy's call.

And the lily of the valley
That I gave my little Sally
Was the faded penny bouquet that a flower girl sells;
She has never seen one growing,
As it's easy to be showing,
For it's birthplace is the Dreamland that's beyond Bow Bells.

Oh! it pains me in our walking—
All the oaths and shameful talking,
And the folks that brush her passing, and the glances bold!
But though evil things may touch her,
They can never hurt or smutch her,
For she turns the dirt to sweetness as a flower the mould.

Nay, it's not in country places,
'Mid the fields and simple faces,
Out of sight and sound of evil, that a pure heart grows;
It is here in London city,
In the sin and shame and pity,
For the pure heart draws it pureness from the wrong it knows.

When my Sally's sweetness found me,
I was like the men around me;
I was coarse and low and selfish as the beast that dies;
But her grace began to win me,
And my heart was changed within me,
And I learned to pray from gazing in my darling's eyes.

GRIM WALKER.

Between the years of 1863 and 1865 a full thousand people heard the story of Grim Walker. That was during the fiercest part of the civil war, and minor incidents were speedily absorbed and forgotten. I doubt if there are a score of people living to-day who can recall the details of this singular man's adventures, and I do not remember that anything save a brief outline of the massacre of his family has ever appeared in print.

I was a pony express rider on the Overland route. That meant helping to guard stages, carrying a light mail on the saddle, forwarding despatches, taking my turn to act as agent of some stable, and various other things which need not be explained. There were then several great trails leading west from the borders of civilization, and all were more or less travelled, but the favorite routes were from St. Joseph and Council Bluffs, the one being known as the northern and the other as the southern route. I was on a route along the Platte river, west of Fort Kearney, which was sometimes fifty miles long, and sometimes one hundred and twenty-five, according to the way the Indians were behaving and the number of men we had for service.

Grim Walker was a pioneer named Charles O. Walker, from near Iowa City. He was a giant in size, naturally sour and taciturn of disposition, and his family consisted of a wife and three children. While the country was excited over the civil war, and travel by the Overland had almost come to a stop, except in cases of necessity, Walker and others formed an immigrant party to make a push for the golden land. When I first heard of them they numbered twenty wagons and sixty or seventy people, and were on the Platte, east of Kearney, which was then dangerous ground. When the outfit reached Kearney, some were for turning back, others for electing a new captain, others for settling down near by and establishing ranches. It seemed that there were three or four different factions in the party, and several bitter quarrels had resulted. In the then state of affairs 200 brave and united men could have scarcely hoped to reach the Colorado or Wyoming line, for the Indians were up in arms on every trail, and thirsting for blood and scalps. When it was known, therefore, that Grim Walker, as he had come to be known, had been elected captain of a faction and intended to push on at the head of only seven families, which could muster but nine fighting men, soldiers, hunters, Indian fighters and overland men argued and scolded and predicted. Not an argument could move Grim Walker. Not a prediction could frighten one of his adherents. It appeared to them to be a case where manhood and pride were at stake, and when it was hinted that the military would restrain them they made secret preparations and departed at night. It was an awful thing for those bigoted and determined men to drive their wives and children, consisting of twenty-two people, to a horrible death, but nothing short of a battle with the military would have stopped them.

They left Kearney one night about 10 o'clock, drawing away quietly and traveling at their best speed. They could not have gone ten miles before being discovered by the Indians. A party of twenty of us left over the same trail at noon the next day, and we had gone only fifteen miles when we found evidences that the little party, which was keeping along the Platte, had been attacked. This must have been about daylight. Soon after sunrise they had been driven to shelter in a grove of cottonwoods, but before reaching it one of the men had been killed and scalped, a wagon had broken down and been abandoned, and stray bullets had killed a woman and a child as they cowered down behind the cargo of wagons. At four o'clock in the afternoon we came to the grove, driving away the last of the savages, but we were too late. Such a spectacle as we there beheld was enough to sicken the heart of the bravest Indian fighter. The little party had been attacked by about 300 redskins, and the fight had lasted for half a day. As near as we could figure from blood spots on the earth, fourteen Indians had been killed, and there were bloody trails to show that as many more had been wounded. The foolhardy men had died game as an offset. We made out that their camp had been carried by a charge, and that the last of the fighting had been hand to hand. Five of the women had been carried off into horrible captivity, while all the others had been butchered—all save Grim Walker. The bodies had been cut and hacked and mutilated in a terrible manner, but we could have identified Walker by his size, even had he been decapitated. The immigrants' horses had all been killed, the wagons plundered and burned, and the savages were bundling up some of the plunder when we came in sight and drove them away. All that was left us was the sad work of burying the corpses.

A month later we heard that Grim Walker had escaped from the fight, breaking out of the grove and riding off on a horse just as the conflict closed in. Men belonging to the Overland had met and talked with him east of Kearney. He had three wounds, but seemed unconscious of them as he briefly related the story of the fight, and vowed that he would have the lives of five Indians for every white person who had perished. Nothing further was heard of him until June of the following year. I was then in government employ as a scout and despatch rider, and was on the Smoky Hill Fork of the Kansas river, twenty miles west of Fort McPherson, riding with two other scouts, when we came upon Grim Walker. He had gone east after the massacre, and had built for himself a bullet-proof wagon. It was a great cage on wheels and everything about it was made of iron. Wheels, box, bottom, top—every part of it was bullet-proof. It was pierced or loopholed in fifty places for musketry, ventilated at the top, and was drawn by four mules. The man must have had considerable means at his disposal to pay for a vehicle like that, and he had come all the way from Council Bluffs alone. The interior was fitted up with a sleeping berth, iron tanks for holding food and water, and he had come back to the plains to keep his vow. But for his grimness the idea would have raised a laugh. He must have been en route for many long days, and he certainly had passed through many perils. We heard afterward he had reached the fort one afternoon, and it became known that he would push on, every effort was made to dissuade him. For a time he was silent—grim—deaf. Then he pointed to the northeast and said:

"There lie the bones of my children and friends, and I will not rest until I avenge them thrice over."

They told him the country was alive with hostiles, and that every rod of the way was beset with perils; but as the sun went down he harnessed his mules to the iron tongue, climbed into the saddle, and without a nod of farewell to any one he rode to the west in the gathering gloom—more grim, more determined, more of a devil than a human being. He had traveled a good share of the night over a country in which death lurked in every ravine, but the watchful savages had not espied him. He had traveled until mid-afternoon next day along a trail where savages outnumbered the snakes twenty to one, but somehow they had missed him. We were riding at full speed for the fort, keeping the shelter of the dry ravines and the valleys, and expecting at any moment to be pursued, when we ran upon Grim Walker. His wagon stood upon the open prairie, at least half a mile from the river and the shelter of the cottonwoods. The four mules had been unharnessed and turned out to graze, and the man was cooking his supper at a campfire, the smoke of which would draw the Indians for ten miles around. Our astonishment when we found him there alone kept us dumb for a few minutes. We sat on our horses and stared at him, and he greeted our presence by a mere nod. When I recognized him as Grim Walker I began to suspect the enterprise he had on foot, and after I had put a few questions he briefly explained:

"I am here to kill Indians. You can look my wagon over if you care to."

It was what I had described. He had a barrel or more of fresh water, a lot of flour and meat, a small stove to cook on, and a perfect arsenal of firearms. It was evident that the Indians could not get at him with bullets nor tomahawk, nor fire, and it would take weeks to starve him out. There was only one thing that troubled the man. His stock would be killed off at once when he was attacked, and he would then have no way of moving his wagon. We helped him out of his dilemma by agreeing to take the animals to the fort. The harnesses were piled into his house, and it was understood that he should come for the mules when he wanted them. He had a compass and we gave him the exact bearings, and as we rode away he was preparing to toast another piece of meat, seeming utterly unconcerned over the dangers of his surroundings. As to what happened during the next three weeks I had a few meagre details from his own lips, but plenty of information from warriors who afterward became "friendly." That is, when licked out of their boots half a dozen times, their villages destroyed, many of their ponies shot, and their squaws and children driven to temporary starvation, they cried for peace in order to recruit and make ready for another campaign.

The campfire which Grim Walker built saved the three of us from being ambushed. A warrior told me that forty savages were between us and the fort when the smoke led them to believe that a large party of immigrants must be camped in the bottoms. It could only be a large party which would dare build such a fire in a hostile country. The warriors were all drawn off by a signal to attack the large game, and before sundown that evening two hundred murderous redskins were opening their eyes very wide at sight of the one lone wagon anchored on the prairie under their noses. How did it get there? Where were the horses or mules? Was it occupied? They must have asked themselves these questions over and over again, but there stood the wagon, grim, silent, mysterious. The whole band finally moved down for a closer inspection, believing the vehicle to be abandoned, and hopeful that something in the shape of plunder had been left behind. They had come close—they had entirely surrounded the vehicle—when a sheet of flame darted from one of the portholes, and Grim Walker had begun to tally his victims. Before the redskins could get out of range he had killed seven of them, using shotguns and buckshot. It was only when they came to return the fire the savages discovered what sort of a vehicle had been hauled out there among them. They wasted hundreds of bullets before they ceased firing, and with a rifle Walker killed two more of them before night set in.

The superstitious nature of the Indian would have driven him away had he not burned for revenge. And, too, it was argued that the wagon must contain something of great value to have been built that way, and greed was added to the thirst for vengeance. They believed that the bottom of the box, at least, was of wood, and about three hours after dark a number of warriors, each having a bunch of dry grass under his arm, crept forward to the vehicle to start a fire under it. They crept as noiselessly as serpents, but before a man of them had passed under a double barrelled shotgun belched forth its contents and two more bucks set out for the happy hunting grounds. Next day, refusing to believe that a wagon could be bullet-proof, the Indians opened a fusilade, which was maintained for two hours. They were behind trees and logs and other cover, and not a shot was provoked in response. Various schemes were concocted to get at the wagon, which was finally believed to contain a party of hunters, but none promised success. At noon, however, a number of young warriors volunteered to carry out a plan. There were twelve of them, and they were to approach the wagon in a wide circle. The idea was to seize and upset it, and thus render the occupants harmless. The circle was made and it gradually narrowed until the signal for a rush was made.

The man within—grim, silent, watchful—let the circle close, and the warriors seize the wheels before he opened fire. It would have taken a dozen stout men to have lifted two of the wheels off the ground. He shot down three of them and the others fled in terror, and half an hour later the seige was abandoned and the Indians were moving off. For two long weeks the wagon remained in that spot, an object of curiosity to scouts and hunters—an object of awe and menace to the savages. Then, one morning just at daylight, Grim Walker came into Fort McPherson for his mules. He was going to move his iron cage to new fields. He replenished his provisions, and inside of two hours was off again, having spoken less than fifty words during his stay. It seemed as if he had grown taller, fiercer—more grim and revengeful. There was something pitiful in knowing that he alone had survived the massacre; something appalling in the knowledge that he had become a Nemesis whom nothing but blood would satisfy.

The wagon was moved north to the headwater of the Saline Fork. One who has ever been over the route will wonder how it could have been done. It was attacked there one forenoon about 10 o'clock by a band of thirty warriors who had been raiding on the Solomon's river. The mules were staked out, and Grim Walker sat at his camp fire. The warriors charged up on horseback, believing they had a hunter's or surveyor's outfit, and while they stampeded and secured the mules, four of them were killed from the loopholes of the cage. They came back again, and another was killed and two were wounded. Then they discovered what sort of an enemy they had to deal with and withdrew, Grim Walker and his wagon remaining there for a month. When the Indians would no longer come to him he set out in search of them, and he became a veritable terror. Twenty different warriors whom I interviewed between 1864 and 1867 told me that Walker was more feared than a hundred Indian fighters. He killed everything he came to that was Indian, including squaws, ponies, children and dogs. No camp felt safe from him. He had the ferocity of a hungry tiger and the cunning of a serpent. He used his iron wagon as a headquarters, and made raids for fifty miles around. During the summer our scouts saw Walker or his wagon once a fortnight. He was last seen alive on September 2, on the Republican river, when he had a fresh Indian scalp at his belt. He had then blown up his wagon with gunpowder and abandoned it, although he did not state the fact. His hair and beard had become long and unkempt, his clothing was in rags, and there could be no doubt that he had gone mad. On the 15th of the month as I rode with an escort of soldiers south of where he was seen on the 2d, and fifty miles from the spot, we found him dead. He lay on a bare knoll, on the broad of his back, with his arms folded over his breast and his rifle by his side. His eyes were wide open, as if looking at the buzzards sailing above him, and we soon satisfied ourselves that he had died from natural causes. He had a dozen scars and wounds, but disease had overpowered him, or his work had been done. He had exacted a full measure of vengeance. Better for the Indians had they let his immigrant party pass on in peace, for he had brought mourning to a hundred lodges.—Sun.

"I don't care!" exclaimed the young lady behind the counter, when she heard of the marriage of an acquaintance to a rich codger, old enough to be her father: "they sneer at me because I am a saleslady, but I'd rather be a saleslady than a lady that is sold."—Boston Transcript.

How to be Happy.

Are you almost disgusted,
With life, little man?
I will tell you a wonderful trick
That will bring you contentment,
If anything can—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Are you awful tired
With play, little girl?
Weary, discouraged, and sick?
I'll tell you the loveliest
Game in the world—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Though it rains like the rain
Of the flood, little man,
And the clouds are forbidding and thick,
You can make the sun shine
In your soul, little man—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Though the skies are like brass
Overhead, little girl,
And the walk like a well heated brick;
And are earthly affairs
In a terrible whirl—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

"THE MORNING LAND."

When but a mere child on the plantation he heard the old folks telling of the Morning Land—a far-away place where sorrow and trouble were unknown—where night never came—where humanity rolled off its burdens never to take them up again. He determined then that when he grew older he would set out in search of the Paradise which had been so graphically pictured. When he had older grown he started on his journey, but he grew hungry and weary and footsore, and men ridiculed him and said:

"There is no Morning Land. You are searching for a myth."

While he abandoned the search for a while his convictions as a child could not be shaken, and he whispered to himself:

"Perhaps I am not old enough or I have taken the wrong direction. I will renew the search by and by."

Sickness and trouble and danger came to him as he waited. Men argued with and ridiculed him. They scoffed at the idea of the land of rest and peace, but deep down in his own heart he felt the conviction that there must be, and as his burdens of life increased, he somehow felt that the Morning Land had come nearer to him. Poor, ignorant and lowly, he cherished the thought as a prisoner for life loves a sunbeam which enters his barred window to whisper to him of the doings of the great world beyond.

Once when sickness and poverty had almost weighted him down, and his troubles seemed greater than he could bear, he wavered for a moment in his belief. He had searched long and vainly for the path. He was afraid that he must die without finding it. But it was only for a moment. Then he remembered the words of a gray-haired exhorter:

"You may hev to wait an' wait, but yer reward shall be the greater. In dat Mornin' Land de weary shall be at rest."

When he had become old and weak a blindness fell upon him, and many times his sightless eyes filled with tears and he whispered to himself:

"I have waited and waited, but now I am blind and I shall never find the Morning Land."

One summer's evening as he sat at his door-step this thought grew stronger upon him, and in his loneliness and amidst his troubles he sobbed and grieved like a young child. His eyes were yet tear-filled when he suddenly cried out to the wondering children at his feet:

"I kin see agin! De Lawd has giben me back my sight!"

They ran away and brought a woman and she came to find him dead in his chair.

"See, there is a smile on his face!" whispered the children.

"Chill'en," she replied, as a great awe fell upon her, "de good Lawd gin him his sight to see into de Mornin' Land—jess dat, an' den He called him to come an' lib dar' forever!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE OLD MAN WAS THERE.

It was dark in the depot one day in December when the evening train came in. An elderly farmer was backed up against the partition, watching in open-mouthed wonder, the big puffing engine and the yellow cars as they discharged their passengers, when a handsome young girl in a sealskin cloak dashed forward, and throwing herself upon the honest granger's manly breast imprinted a kiss upon his sun-burned cheek, and exclaimed:

"You old dear pa, I knew you would be waiting for me! And how's mother and how's John? And oh! I'm glad to get back—and, where's my trunk? and, oh! pa, you take the check and let's hurry."

The granger was old and dried up, and he had never known what it was to have a wife, much less a daughter. He mistrusted the young lady in the sealskin cloak had made a mistake; but instead of stammering and hemming and hawing, he came gallantly up to the scratch, and throwing both arms around the fair creature, he made up his mind to be a father to her, or die in the attempt. Imprinting a kiss like the report of a pistol on her cheek, he enthusiastically ejaculated:

"Oh, yer mother's well, an' John an' Henry, an' (smack) Jane, an' Susan, (smack, smack) an' Horace, an' Belindy, an' Calvin (smack) oh, they're all smart an' hearty, an'—"

By the time the young lady's friends could reach her, she had slid into a stone faint, and they had to lug her home in a hack, while the granger, as he finished the third round with her outraged young man and sauntered out of the depot, leaving him with a bad eye and a ruptured coat, chuckled to himself:

"The old man's getting old an' stiff an' careless like, but when any young females want to play any games o' Copenhagen they'll find him to time—and I should'nt be s'prised if it rained 'fore nine o'clock. G'lang, Kate!"

HOW GOLD IS SHIPPED.

Each keg contains $50,000 in clear gold. It is at the Bank of America, at New York, that most of the gold from that city is shipped.

Kegs in which the gold is packed—"specie kegs," as they are called, are made of extra hard wood. They must have an extra iron hoop. Specie is not thrown loosely into a keg, nor, upon the other hand, is it carefully wrapped in tissue paper and piled up one coin upon the other. The keg serves only as a protection for canvas bags, into which the gold is placed in the ordinary hit-and-miss fashion of pennies in a man's pocket. Into each bag goes $5000 and 10 bags fill a keg.

In the interests of security each keg is treated to what is technically known among the shippers as the "red-taping" process. At each end of the keg, in the projecting rim of the staves above the head, are bored four holes at equi-distant intervals. A piece of red tape is run through the holes, crossing on the head of the keg and the ends finally meet in the center. At the point of meeting the ends are sealed to the keg's head by wax bearing the seal of the shipper.

Gold crosses the ocean very much as does every other kind of freight, without very much looking after. The average rate of insurance is about $2000 on a shipment of $1,000,000, There are shippers who do not insure. Having $1,000,000 to ship, they will give it in equal parts to half a dozen different vessels. It is a strict rule with some firms never to trust more than $250,000 at a time on any one ship.

A certain party furnishes all the kegs for gold and packs them. The man who does this is a monopolist in his way. Shippers of large amounts always lose a few dollars by abrasion, but not exceeding 16 ounces on a million dollar shipment. The only protection to be found against abrasion lies in the shipment of gold in bars instead of coin. Gold bars are not readily obtained.

AN AGREEABLE JOURNEY.

The Kentuckians tell a good story of ex-Governor Magoffin, of that state, who is a talker and likes to do most of the talking himself. One day, in making the journey from Cincinnati to Lexington, he shared his seat in the car with a bright-eyed, pleasant-faced gentleman. The governor, after a few common-place remarks, to which the stranger smiled, and nodded assent, branched into a description of the scenes he had witnessed in different parts of the country, and grew eloquent over the war, described with glowing speech the horse races he had witnessed, talked learnedly of breeding and told thrilling stories of his battles with the Indians in the northwest. The hours slipped rapidly away, and when the train was nearing Lexington the two exchanged cards, parted with a cordial shake of the hands. The governor drove to an inn, and to a number of friends he remarked that the time had never seemed so short before.

"Then you must have had pleasant company aboard."

"You are right. I met a gentleman of unusual intelligence. We conversed all the way over. I never was brought in contact with a more agreeable man."

"Indeed, who was he?" asked his friends.

"Wait a minute; I have his card," and the governor felt in his pocket, and produced a bit of pasteboard. "His name is King."

"Not Bob King?" shouted a dozen in one breath.

"Yes, Gentlemen; Robert King—that is the way the card reads," was the proud reply.

A roar of laughter followed.

"Why, governor, Bob King is deaf as a post. He was born deaf and dumb."—Ben Perley Poore, in Boston Budget.

MR. DEPEW ON TOBACCO.

Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, when in Albany the other day, met a friend who offered him a cigar. Mr. Depew declined it, and said: "I was once a confirmed smoker, smoking twenty cigars a day, when I gave up the habit. I now do not use tobacco. Twelve or thirteen years ago I found myself suffering from indigestion, with wakeful fits at night, nervousness and inability to submit to mental strain. I was in the city of Albany one day, and bought a twenty-five cent Partaga. I was walking down Broadway, and at the corner of State street I took the cigar out of my mouth, and looked at it. I had smoked about an inch of it. A thought struck me. I had been reading a German savant's book on the unhealthfulness of the use of tobacco. I looked at my cigar, and I said, 'You are responsible for this mischief.' I threw the Partaga in the gutter, and resolved not to smoke again. For six months I suffered the torments of the damned. I wanted to smoke, but I absolutely refused. My appetite meanwhile was growing better, my sleep was growing sounder, and I could do more work. I did not smoke up to two or three years ago. After I had worked for seven teen hours continuously one day, late at night I tried the soothing influence of a cigar. I lit a cigar. It was delicious. I enjoyed the aroma of the smoke and the pleasure of the cigar more than I can say. The next day I smoked four cigars and the next two. I found the use of tobacco was affecting my physical system, and I stopped it entirely, and have not commenced it again, and probably never shall."

They have devised a new test for incipient intoxication in the following, which must be repeated at the rate of 200 words a minute: "If the white bootblack blacks the black bootblack's boot, will the black bootblack's boot be blacked? If the white bootblack blacks but one of the black bootblack's boots, what will the black bootblack do?" If it proves that the bite whootblack boots the back whiteblack's blooks, etc., you can tell what the matter is.—Springfield Union.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, 1887.

THE Nevada Legislature has adopted resolutions disfranchising Mormons in that state.

THE president has signed the interstate commerce bill, which will go into effect April 5. Judge Thurman is mentioned as the probable chairman.

SECRETARY MANNING was chosen president of the Western National Bank of New York Wednesday, and U. S. Treasurer Jordan was elected vice president.

JUDGE THOMAS RUSSELL, chairman of the state board of railroad commissioners, died at his home in Boston Wednesday of pneumonia, in the 82d year of his age.

IN the multitude of propositions before the Legislature to amend the liquor law we trust the Republicans will not forget that plank in the platform of the party pledging it in the favor of a prohibitory constitutional amendment. It now devolves upon the Republicans in the Legislature to prove that the campaign platform means something.

THE dreadful calamity on the Central Vermont Railroad gives new and terrible emphasis to the imperative necessity of adopting some different method of heating and lighting railroad cars. The accident was one which human foresight probably could not have prevented, but the burning up of the imprisoned victims would not have followed if the cars had been lighted by electricity and heated by steam, and all railroads should be obliged to adopt some method of this kind speedily.

THE strike of the 'longshoremen at New York is practically over, and the men are crowding back to work when they can. In the Worcester county boot shops there is not much change, though new men are coming in steadily, and the strikers are weakening in places. Boston is now having a taste of striker's folly, the 900 employes of the South Boston and Cambridge street railroads having tied up those lines because of imaginary grievance. It really looks as if the gods were bent on destroying the labor organizations which encourage these foolish strikes, and the sooner it is done the better it will be, as they are conducted at present.

A FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.

The worst railroad accident that New England has ever known occurred on the Central Vermont Railroad, about four miles north of White River Junction, early last Saturday morning, by which nearly forty persons met a dreadful death. The Montreal express left White River Junction at 2 a. m., the train consisting of the locomotive, baggage car, combination mail and smoking car, two passenger coaches and the Pullman sleepers St. Albans, from Springfield, and Pilgrim, from Boston. There were about 80 passengers on board, many of them bound for the Montreal carnival. Fifteen minutes later the train approached the Woodstock bridge over the White river. Twenty rods south of the bridge the trucks of the rear sleeper, the Pilgrim, left the track, owing, it is believed, to a broken journal, the car bumped along over the ties until the bridge was reached, when the rear end swung off the edge, and in another instant the car toppled over and fell to the frozen river 50 feet below, dragging with it the other sleeper and the two passenger cars. The coupling broke between the forward passenger car and the mail car, and the engine, baggage and mail cars passed over the bridge in safety. As the cars went over the brink they turned completely over, striking with a terrible crash on the ice below, where they lay a shapeless mass.

The horrified engineer quickly brought his locomotive to a standstill. Calling his fireman, he seized an ax and both men slid down the steep embankment on the north side of the river and hurried to the wreck. Even before they reached it the supreme horror of fire was added to the situation. The flames seemed to appear first in the wreck of the second passenger coach. When they reached the wreck only one of the imprisoned passengers had succeeded in extricating himself. He was a half-naked man who crawled from a broken window in the Boston sleeper. The opportunity given them to work was appalingly brief, for already the flames had appeared in the wreck of all the cars, and were spreading rapidly to all parts of the great funeral pyre. Almost the first one they succeeded in rescuing was Miss Emily Lovell, the only lady in the train who escaped unhurt. Several others were rescued with more or less difficulty, but the situation of those remaining in the wreck had by this time become desperate and almost hopeless. One by one the agonizing cries of the dying were stilled by the fast approaching flames. The fire had communicated to the bridge above, and that long structure was a mass of flames, and the falling timbers added to the danger of the work of rescue. Men never worked with more unselfish desperation. The very horror of the situation half-paralyzed their efforts, and the bitter cold numbed the bodies of many of the half-clad rescuers. It seemed as though nearly all remaining in the wreck lived till the flames reached them. Indeed, the mercy of instant death came to few of those who perished, while the sufferings of those who survived were scarcely less great. Within half an hour after the first crash the work of rescue had ended, for none remained alive who could possibly be reached. As soon as help had arrived from the towns about, and the flames had burned out, the work of taking out the bodies began. They were generally unrecognizable, being simply charred and dismembered masses of flesh beyond all human shape, and can only be identified by such clothing, jewelry and other articles as were not destroyed. Some of the bodies were doubtless completely consumed in the intense heat and the exact number of the lost may never be known. As far as can be ascertained about 40 were killed, and the number of injured is about the same. Nine persons went through the ordeal unharmed. Among the killed was Frank L. Wesson of Springfield, son of D. B. Wesson, the pistol manufacturer, who was accompanying his sister-in-law, Miss Lovell, to Montreal. She was only slightly wounded. Peter Blais of Warren, an employe of the Knowles steam pump works, and his son Fred, 19 years old, were also among the victims. One woman was carried away wounded and left on the snow on a mattress while the rescuers returned to the wreck to save more lives. When all that could had been taken out, the place where this woman had been left was again sought, and, to the horror of the men, nothing was found but a mass of burnt and charred remains. The mattress upon which she had lain had been afire, and, powerless to help herself, she had been burned to death away from the wreck.

The recent item in the Springfield Union, to the effect that W. H. H. Murray had been engaged in order to cover a deficit in the Royal Arcanum treasury was slightly "off." There is not, and never has been a deficit, there being nearly $125 in the treasury. The council thought there was a chance to make a little more by engaging Mr. Murray, and did so, but had no idea that desire to add to their bank acoount could be called a "deficit."

If Palmer merchants think the town can do better and attract more business by the granting of licenses; let them still continue to think so; but that does not make it so. An enterprising and successful manufacturer in the western part of the state who was looking for a new place in which to locate his growing works, was strongly urged to come to Palmer. He liked the location well enough, and was quite inclined to favor the move, but for the fact that the town granted licenses, and he would not move into such a town, on account of the trouble it caused him with his help.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

The second of the farmers' institutes, held Tuesday at the Weeks House, was attended by a large number of farmers and others, who seemed to thoroughly enjoy the meeting. Dr. Holbrook presided. In the forenoon the reasons for the decline of agriculture in New England were discussed, E. B. Lynde of West Brookfield, ex-Senator W. R. Sessions of Hampden and John Martin of Warren being the most prominent speakers, bringing forward the theory that the remedy lay within the power of the farmers themselves; by their enterprise and liberality they should enlist the young men of to-day as their successors.

After dinner Henry Noble of Pittsfield gave a talk on "The proper care and feeding of milch cows," he claiming that care, comfort, cleanliness, a mild temperature, variety of nutritious food, good water and kind treatment were necessary. The cow is like a delicate machine, and must be handled carefully. A soft dry bed of sand, sawdust, old hay or straw should be provided, and she fails to secrete the most milk when her temperature falls below 40. In his 50 years' experience with cows he never knew but one that kind treatment would have no effect upon, and has often found vicious cows to be the best. He considered Jersey milk excellent for butter, but too oily, strong and heavy for home use, and had produced the best results from grade shorthorns and Holsteins. Ayrshires were also considered good in mountain towns, though their small bodies, short teats and nervous disposition are against them. Advice and experience was also given by others. Dr. Holbrook claimed that a horse would digest his food better if he did not drink until two or three hours after eating. W. R. Sessions claimed that he saved the cost of bran this winter by feeding cob meal.

The next institute will be held March 15th, when "The grass crop" will be discussed.

VITAL STATISTICS—1886.

The books of the town clerk, which owing to the tardiness of some clergymen and physicians in making their returns have just been made up, show that there were 165 births in Palmer last year, against 187 in 1885, the boys standing one ahead with a score of 83.

While engaged in carrying some heavy irons to the machine shop at the paper mill, Wednesday, Owen Hammond slipped and fell down the mill stairs, injuring himself quite badly.

Our neighboring city of Ludlow is infested with some one who is clamorous for hen flesh. Mitchell Pero awoke Tuesday morning to find that some party had removed thirty of his choice fowls without questioning the owner in regard to the matter. Possibly they are out on a strike. It is certain they have struck out, and the owner is anxious as to their whereabouts.

BONDSVILLE.

The W. C. T. U. met Thursday at the house of Mrs. F. A. Talmage.

An interesting open meeting is promised by the S. of T. next Monday night.

Patrick Moriarty's horse, which was kicked by the other belonging to the same pair, is not seriously injured, an ugly gash on the hip being the only effect.

The next three meetings of Sparkling Water Division, S. of T., give promise of being interesting. The meeting next Monday evening will be public, and all are invited. Monday, Feb. 21st, the division proposes to regale themselves with a "griddle cake supper," and Feb. 28th they will entertain all the divisions in this vicinity. G. W. A., Sarah A. LUDLOW.

A number of the young friends of the Misses Fairbanks gave them a surprise visit Monday evening.

Rev. Edward Day gave an exceedingly interesting lecture on Alaska last Sunday evening, to which a good-sized audience listened with pleasure.

Quite a number of the young people visited the Crescent Hill toboggan slide last Saturday, and think tobogganing even better than roller skating.

There is one thing of which our people may well be proud, and for which they should be thankful—our school house. The sociable held there last Friday evening was pronounced by all the most pleasant one of the season. The parlor is large and very pleasant, the new piano a very sweet-toned one, and everything about the place well fitted for such a gathering. It is hoped that hereafter Ludlow people need not be compelled to go to the vestry of the church for sociables. The C. L. S. C. hold their meetings in the same place once in two weeks, on Friday evenings. This week portions of the "Merchant of Venice" are to be read.

George W. Penniman of Minnesota will speak in the Union church next Tuesday evening. His subject will be "Temperance From the Prohibition Standpoint." He is a very able speaker, and no doubt but what his lecture will be a very interesting one.

The JOURNALS now reach Three Rivers every Friday evening on the 5.37 train, but subscribers complain that they cannot get them from the postoffice until 8 or 8.30. A man who lives a mile or more out of the village came to the office at 5.30 one afternoon not long since and asked for his mail. The postmaster was writing, and the citizen was obliged to wait until after 7 for his letters. Fortunately he was a patient man. Has it got so that the public must serve the postmaster, when he is paid to serve them?

We have to record the death, on Sunday, of one of our oldest and most respected townsmen, Samuel Alexander, who was born in Newton Stewart, Scotland, in the year 1812, but came from there to Ware in 1856, and engaged with C. A. Stevens as twister. In the following year he and his family commenced work for Geo. H. Gilbert & Co. at Gilbertville, remaining in their employ 21 years as bookkeeper and overseer of the cloth department. He assisted the firm all through their success with the famous Balmoral skirts and their inimitable flannels, and was much beloved by all who knew him.

Foster visited the local assembly of the Knights of Labor last Saturday, and after looking over the ground advised the strikers to return to work, as they had no cause for going out, and were at fault at every point. They accordingly did so, that is, such of them as the Messrs. Ellis chose to engage, several of the prominent ones in the strike being dropped from their employ.

Father Moran is to live in the parochial house on North street during his lifetime.

DEATH OF OTIS LANE.

Otis Lane died about 12 o'clock last night of heart disease. He was on the street yesterday, and retired last evening apparently as well as usual.

Mr. Lane was born in Sturbridge, came to Ware about 1832 as clerk for Mays & Freeman, and has lived here ever since, except about six years he was in business in Brimfield. He was connected with the late Addison Sandford in business for 13 years. In 1857 he was elected treasurer of the savings bank, and held the office until 1886. The savings bank business grew under his able management from deposits of a few hundred thousand dollars to nearly two and a half million, and was one of the oldest and most energetic business men the town has ever had. He has served the town as treasurer about 8 years, which office he held at the time of his death. He also held the office of selectman for some years, and has been agent of the cemetery for nearly thirty years. He married Mirinda Aamilton in 1835, who survives him, with one daughter, who is the wife of Hon. Lewis N. Gilbert. He united with the East Congregational church in 1951, was elected deacon in 1861, and held the office 18 years.

DEATH OF STEPHEN B. WITHERELL.

Stephen B. Witherell, who died on Saturday, Feb. 5th, aged 66 years, 8 days, was born in Middlebury, Vt., but was brought here when four months old and has resided here ever since. His illness was brief, as he walked down street Tuesday, and was apparently as well as ever before. Mr. Witherell learned the trade of tinsmith, and was in the stove and tin business here for about 30 years. For some years, since he has been out of business, he has been sexton of the East Congregational church and chapel, and janitor of the library building, which has taken most of his time. In all this he took great interest. In years past he has occupied position of trust, and was town clerk for some years. He will be missed perhaps more than any man that could have been taken from the community.

In the death of Mr. Witherell the town has lost one who always took an active interest in all its affairs, and was ever ready with time and means as far as he was able in any work intended to make the place attractive and beautiful. His family have lost a tender, loving companion and father who was ever cheerful, whose clouds have ever seemed to show their silver lining. The church has lost a member who was ever ready with willing hands to do all in his power for its wellfare, the Sunday school its secretary for 32 years, who was rarely in all this time absent from his post. The young people of the church found in him one that would assist them in any of their youthful pleasures, ever ready to forget self for the happiness of others.

The funeral was held in the chapel on Tuesday afternoon, Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., giving a touching address. There were several fine floral tributes from neighbors and the Sunday school.

DRUNKENNESS in Rhode Island has decreased from 20 to 45 per cent under the prohibitory law, according to the chief of police of that state, and the commitments to the state work-house have fallen off more than one-half.

IT is charged that Boston's veteran police court clerk, John C. Leighton, who recently resigned, is $200,000 short in his accounts.

CARD OF THANKS.—We do sincerely thank our neighbors and friends for their kind assistance in our double bereavement in the death of our two little ones, Walter and Carroll, and for the many letters of sympathy sent us.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, FEB. 9th, 1887.

The board of agriculture concluded on Thursday its annual meeting. Much interest centered on the election of a successor to Secretary John E. Russell. After an informal ballot, in which the highest vote was 16 out of 35, the following formal ballot was taken:

Whole number of votes.....35
Necessary for choice.....18
Elijah W. Wood of Newton..... 2
Elbridge Cushman of Lakeville..... 2
Alvin Barrus of Goshen..... 12
Francis H. Appleton of Peabody..... 19

From March 1st, when Secretary Russell goes out, to July 1st, when Mr. Appleton comes in, Mr. W. H. Griffith, the present clerk, will be secretary pro tem.

An important special report was presented to the House on Thursday by Secretary Dickinson of the state board of education, upon the subject of aiding schools in the poor country towns. He proposes two bills. One is to rearrange the distribution of the present half of the school fund so as to give 6-13ths to towns with not over $500,000 valuation, 4-13ths to towns between $500,000 and $1,000,000, and 1-13th to towns between $1,000,000 and $3,000,000. The other bill proposes to levy a half mill tax on all the taxable property of the state, and to make a permanent fund of the money, whose income shall be divided among the towns on the same basis as above.

The Senate adopted Friday afternoon, without debate and unanimously, the resolutions of Senator Morse of Norfolk, which call attention to the defenseless condition of Boston and all other eastern ports, stigmatize this as disgraceful to the nation, and call upon Congress to make immediate preparations for defense, because in time of peace it is the best policy to prepare for war. The House has rejected the resolutions, 75 to 79, but a reconsideration is pending. Mr. Taft of Palmer was the leading opponent.

On the same afternoon the House adopted, by pretty nearly a tie vote, as it sounded viva voce, the resolutions asking Congress to take vigorous steps for the eradication of pleuro-pneumonia in the United States. Mr. Taft of Palmer asked what need there was of this Legislature's trying to instruct Congress, and Mr. Batchelder of Peabody, who was in charge of the resolutions, replied that the matter was serious and the resolutions could not do any harm.

One of the most important committee meetings Friday was that which heard the petition of the Institute of Technology for state aid to the amount of $200,000. Gen. Francis A. Walker, the president, Hon. John M. Forbes, Secretary Dickinson of the board of education, and some other prominent men, urged the granting of the petition.

Estimates for county taxes have been reported by the committee on county estimates, and they are as follows: Barnstable, $14,000; Berkshire, $68,000; Bristol, $138,000; Dukes, $6400; Essex, $205,000; Franklin, $30,000; Hampden, $95,000; Hampshire, $38,000; Middlesex, $175,000; Norfolk, $60,000; Plymouth, $60,000; Worcester, $115,000.

Secretary Peirce has sent to the Legislature his annual compilation of the license statistics of the state. Most of the licenses are of the first (retailers', all kinds of liquors) and fourth (wholesalers', all kinds) classes. Of the second class there were in all 230 licenses; of the third, 119; of the fifth, 217; of the sixth, 503. Eighty in all were revoked. Other statistics, by counties, are these:

	Yes vote.	No vote.	1st class.	4th class.	Receipts for licenses.
Barnstable,	248	688	6	4	$ 1,104 00
Berkshire,	3614	4846	31	35	11,858 00

Totals,	92,716	102,011	3087	2226	$1,176,543 78

The Palmer returns in this table are as follows: First class licenses issued, 13; receipts therefrom, $2150; second class, 2; receipts, $150; third class, 2; receipts, $150; fourth class, 14; receipts, $1400; fifth class, 3; receipts, $225; sixth class, 3; receipts, $3; total receipts, $5078; vote on license, 299 yes to 256 no.

Among the committee reports of the week, the most important have been these: Inexpedient to require all manufactured articles to be plainly marked with the name of the manufacturer; inexpedient to legislate further on the recount of ballots at town elections; inexpedient to require the treasurers of political parties to keep accounts which shall be open to public inspection. The public charities committee has reported a bill giving $15,000 to the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary. For many years they have been in the habit of giving $10,000 a year.

Gov. Ames will hold a public reception from 11 to 1 o'clock on Washington's birthday in the executive chamber. This has not been done since Gov. Robinson's first year, and then it was an unheard of thing. The jam was so tremendous and the motive of the crowd was so clearly mere curiosity that the idea was not tried but once. Gov. Ames's decision is in consequence of a letter addressed to him, saying that besides the celebration of the day, it would be well to let the people, irrespective of political party, feel that there was one day when they could call on the governor when he was not busy with public duties. Among the signers of the letter were ex-Govs. Banks, Claflin, Gaston and Rice, Mayor O'Brien, Postmaster Corse, M. P. Kennard, Eben D. Jordan, Alpheus Hardy, and a list of other prominent men.

A special message was sent to the House Wednesday afternoon by Gov. Ames upon the sale of the Hoosac tunnel to the Fitchburg railroad. The history of the transaction is reviewed at some length, and the governor says he believes it is just and fair to both parties. The state will hereafter receive promptly its share of earnings to which it is entitled. The holding of common stock secures a large interest in the expected increase in the value of the road, and the state shares equally with the preferred stock, after the payment of a fixed dividend to the latter. Both have a uniform interest, which will be valuable in the management of the property. At present there is no representation of the state's interests in the board of directors, and the governor recommends immediate steps to that end. He says that the sinking funds have so largely increased in value that they will, with their expected accumulation, pay the entire tunnel debt at maturity, and that the item of interest in the public debt, in the annual state tax, will be gradually obliterated. He regards the great object as already assured—the opening of a new line from the coast to the Hudson.

The hearing in the proposed changes in the Sunday law was given on Wednesday, and so was the annual hearing to the petitioners for woman suffrage. LANDON.

SORE THROAT AND LUNGS, CHAPPED HANDS AND FACE positively cured by Pond's Extract; sold only in bottles, with buff wrappers, and trademark.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, are having a great clearance sale of their entire wholesale and retail stock to make room for spring goods. Their store has been crowded every day since the commencement of this immense sale.

Springfield now has a sensation indeed. Broadhurst Bros., (Morse's Shoe Store) 376 Main street, began their great sale of shop-worn shoes Saturday, February 5. The fun has already commenced, $5 shoes for $3, $3 shoes for $2, and in fact any shoe slightly soiled has to go, no matter what it cost. They have men's Woonsocket pure gum boots at $2.98 a pair, and women's rubbers (small sizes) for 20 cents a pair.

The Tenth Annual Exhibition of American Paintings at Gill's Art Galleries, Springfield, is being well patronized, and is worth a trip of many miles to see. One hundred and fifty paintings by one hundred and eight of our best American painters, each picture being the artist's best, are not often seen. These pictures, including the frames, are held at prices from $2500 to $45 each, in quality, variety of subjects, and sizes to suit all places. The Exhibition is open day and evening, and will only be on view this month.

WE CAUTION ALL AGAINST THEM.

The unprecedented success and merit of Ely's Cream Balm—a real cure for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head—has induced many adventurers to place catarrh medicines bearing some resemblance in appearance, style or name upon the market, in order to trade upon the reputation of Ely's Cream Balm. Don't be deceived. Buy only Ely's Cream Balm. Many in your immediate locality will testify in highest commendation of it. A particle is applied into each nostril; no pain; agreeable to use. Price 50 cents.

FREE TRADE.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cents, large bottles. 46-eow-1y

When Grandpa was a Litttle Boy,

When Grandpa was a little boy about your age," said he
To the curly headed youngster who had climbed upon his knee;
"So studious was he at school, he never failed to pass;
And out of three he always stood second in his class—"
"But, if no more were in it, you were next to foot, like me!"
"Why, bless you, Grandpa never thought of that before," said he.

"When Grandpa was a little boy about your age," said he,
"He very seldom spent his pretty pennies foolishly;
No toy or candy store was there for miles and miles about,
And with his books straight home he'd go the moment school was out—"
"But, if there had been one, you might have spent them all, like me!"
"Why, bless you, Grandpa never thought of that before," said he.

"When Grandpa was a little boy about your age," said he,
"He never staid up later than hour after tea;
It wasn't good for little boys at all, his mother said,
And so, when it was early, she would march him off to bed—"
"But, if she hadn't, maybe you'd have staid up late, like me!"
"Why, bless you, Grandpa never thought of that before," said he.

"When Grandpa was a little boy about you age," said he,
"In summer he went barefooted and was happy as could be;
And all the neighbors 'round about agreed he was a lad
Who was as good as he could be, except when he was bad—"
"But, 'cepting going barefoot, you were very much like me."
"Why, bless you, Grandpa's often thought of that before," said he.

PATENT AND PROPRIETARY MEDICINES.

The Sunday Globe said recently: "One of the most gratifying signs of the times is that with the spread of intelligence, the multiplication of books, and the universality of newspapers, there should be a steady growth in the sale of proprietary medicines. That such medicines fill a want in every community, and fills it acceptably, there is no longer any doubt." Among the best stands Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer, the great remedy for incipient consumption, coughs, colds, etc. Has a record of more than 40 years. For sale at all druggists. LETTER FROM ILLINOIS.

PEORIA, ILL., January 29, 1887.

Editor Palmer Journal:—I was afforded great pleasure on receipt of your last issue. It certainly beats the state of Illinois, and its equal for typographical neatness and beauty, and wide-awake effort is hard to find. It's presence and bright information very forcibly remind me of the scenes and friends I have left behind, and I trust you will pardon me if I ask the privilege of trespassing upon your good nature and valuable space to communicate to your readers and my friends, the impressions and some results of inquiry and observation, that may recall the fact that this is but a little removed from the valley of the Chicopee.

Peoria is a city of about fifty thousand inhabitants, situated on a range of bluffs 400 or 500 feet high, overlooking Peoria Lake, which is an enlargement of the Illinois river at this point. This range is quite equal to Wilbraham mountains, and the view extending for 40 or 50 miles up and down the Illinois valley is very grand, and compares very favorable with the justly celebrated Connecticut valley. The river is navigable for 60 miles above LaSalle, the head of navigation, and during the open season a daily line of boats is run 40 miles north to Henry. The river runs south, with few small towns located by it, to the Mississippi, where it loses itself in the great "Father of Waters" just above St. Louis.

Peoria has its share of beautiful buildings, and the public building for three years now in course of construction, and nearly completed, is one of the prettiest that Uncle Sam can boast. It will be used for post and revenue offices. The city has many beautiful residences, churches, synagogues and cathedrals. The streets are regularly laid out, very wide, paved and some of them running 4 and 5 miles straight away. The system of numbering the streets helps easily to locate any number or building. Each block begins on the even hundred, odd numbers on one side even on the other, so the numbering runs in hundreds. Street cars, drawn mostly by mules, are quite comfortable even when the mercury registers 20° below, because of the stoves in them; some of the drivers even have a genial stove on the platform with them.

The city has a diversity of industries, breweries and railroads predominating. There are nine or ten railroads intersecting this point at every point of the compass, and two or three more booked for 1887. Food and fuel range lower than in Massachusetts: best steak 15 cents per pound, turkeys 10 cents, chickens 25 cents apiece, lard 3 pounds for 25 cents, eggs 25 cents per dozen, Pillsbury flour $1.40 per 50 pound sack, soft coal 7 and 8 cents per bushel, hard coal $6 per ton, No. 1 hay $9.50 per ton.

Perhaps at some future time your friends and mine may consent to another seige of earache. SAMUEL E. BARKER.

Edmund Yates cabled to several American newspapers that the Queen has had one of her old coaches renovated. This is a thrilling piece of intelligence, but if Mr. Yates wants to enthuse American readers, let him telegraph how many pair of colored stockings the Queen has on the line in her back yard each week. Mr. Yates may discover the number by peeping through a knot hole in the fence.—Norristown Herald.

"Look here, waiter," said a man in a city restaurant the other day, "is there any difference in your roast lamb and roast mutton? I don't detect any." "Oh, yes," said the waiter, "you will notice that yesterday when you had roast lamb, I gave you a 25 cent check. To-day, when you had roast mutton, I gave you a 20 cent check. There's the difference.—Providence Journal.

It was raining heavily when Parson Surplus Eel, in crossing the street, met a poorly clad boy whose clothes were soaked. We Two.

What is life? I ask—and you?
We who have known its joys and sorrows,
Its sullen and its fair to-morrows;
We who have thought it perfect day
And fallen fainting by the way—
What use is life to us—we two?

What use is love? I ask—and you?
We who have revelled in its blisses,
Drunk ourselves drunken with its kisses,
And seen its dawn melt into night
Leaving behind but baleful blight;
What use is love to us—we two?

What use are friends? I ask—and you?
We have tested them together
In sunshine and in rainy weather,
And find few left when storms portend,
And none to stand fast to the end;
What use are friends to us—we two?

What use is hope? I ask—and you?
We who through many stern denials
And sickening pain and piteous trials
Have kissed the threshold of the world
To find it still but long deferred—
What use is hope to us—we two?

What use is faith? I ask—and you?
We who have toiled and wrought and strived,
And failed, and prayed to be forgiven,
And watched and waited everywhere,
But heard no answer to our prayer,
What use is faith to us—we two?

Shall we then give up life—we two?
If we shall fall fainting by the way,
There cometh yet a perfect day;
We need both sad and bright to-morrows,
Joys would not be joys without sorrows,
I will not give up life—will you?

Shall we then give up love—we two?
If it goes on in a baleful blight,
The morning followeth the night;
There are yet left for us its kisses
If we but cherish well its blisses;
I will not give up love—will you?

Shall we then give up friends—we two?
We have not waited till the end
For those who stand when storms portend,
Mayhap in clear and cloudy weather,
They'll rise and fall with us together;
I will not give up friends—will you?

Shall we then give up hope—we two?
We may yet pass though long deferred,
The threshold of that gracious world,
And find through many pains and trials
Made glorious all our stern denials;
I will not give up hope—will you?

Shall we give up faith—we two?
If we wait patiently, our prayer
Will soon be answered everywhere;
For failure we may be forgiven,
Since humbly we have toiled and striven;
I will not give up faith—will you?

LOST TO SAVE.

"What's the matter, my dear boy?"

The question was asked by Lawyer Maythorpe, who lived in the large red brick house at the entrance of Silverweir High street, and who was reputed to be "as rich as a Jew." Certainly far richer than Sir Hugh Northall, whom all the little town knew found it a very hard matter to make, as the term goes, both ends meet.

At Silverweir the Northall family had been known and respected; and though it was said, and truly, that Lawyer Maythorpe could put down pounds to Sir Hugh's shillings, and beat him then, the reverence and respect went for Sir Hugh. Indeed, the man of law was considered to have been honored when, by aids and loans, he had extracted the Baronet from more than one pecuniary difficulty that had threatened the foreclosing of the heavy mortgage on the estate, and banishment of the Northall's therefrom.

"And so he ought," ejaculated the Silverweirites, "for was it not Sir Hugh's father who took Lawyer Maythorpe's father by the hand when he had hardly a penny to bless himself with, and aided him to build the vast fortune the son now enjoys?"

Matters stood in this position when his nephew, entering the study abruptly, had caused Lawyer Maythorpe to look up from his writing and ask what the matter was.

"Simply, uncle," said the young man, throwing himself into a chair by the fire—for it was the first of November, and the air was dark and foggy—"that I am the happiest and most miserable man in existence."

"Ah!" remarked the lawyer, dryly; "then you are in love."

"Exactly! Happy because I have seen the only woman I could ever love. Miserable because I have not the slightest chance of winning her."

"Why not? Your are good looking. You are rich, for you are my heir."

"Ah, uncle, but in some cases something more is required; birth—position."

"Then you have looked too high?"

"I have, uncle. The lady I love is Miss Ella Northall."

"The Baronet's daughter! Why, you arrived at Silverweir only yesterday! You can have seen her but once!"

"What matter if once or many times? I love her, and she is beyond my reach."

"Why?" questioned the lawyer, dryly.

"Why? First, because Sir Hugh would consider her by birth far my superior; secondly, his name is time-honored in Silverweir. Look at his position—look at his estate!"

"As to his position and estate, look at that."

Lawyer Maythorpe drew a letter from among the others that were lying on the table, and tossed it over to his nephew, who read with amazement as follows:

PRIVATE.

DEAR MAYTHORPE:—

"I have decided. I can no longer fight against the accumulation of debt that weighs me down. My difficulties increase instead of lessen. I leave Silverweir with my daughter to-night for the Continent, entrusting the whole of my affairs to you. Compound with my creditors the best way you can. I fear the estate must go. The mortgagees will hardly hold their hands if they find the timber has been cut to pay other debts, but save the old place if you can. My daughter to whom I have told all is heart-broken. Farewell old friend. I am sure you will do the best you can."

HUGH NORTHALL.

"Why, uncle," ejaculated the nephew, "can Sir Hugh's affairs be really in this state?"

"Really, Sir Hugh, were his creditors fully paid, would be without a shilling. The fault is not his, but his ancestors', who left him debt as a legacy. If he had done twenty years ago what he is doing now, something might have been saved."

"And the mortgages?"

"Would have been foreclosed long ago had they not been held by—a friend," said the lawyer.

"How do you mean, uncle?" noting his peculiar look.

"This, that there is now but one mortgagee, and that is myself. It is said in Silverweir that I owe a debt of gratitude to Sir Hugh. Well, I have bought up the mortgages—so prevented foreclosure; I have given him a bill of sale on his furniture—so saved that from creditors."

"Then—"

"The estate of Holmbeech, and all it contains at this moment, is mine, you may let all Silverweir know it," put in Lawyer Maythorpe; "mine and my heir's," he laughed. "To-morrow Sir Hugh's flight will be known and to-morrow I take possession."

"Miss Northall, uncle, is in that case no heiress?"

"She is penniless. But—" and Lawyer Maythorpe laughed again—"I shall do the best I can for the Baronet. As to you, lad, why should you not woo and win Ella Northall? But recollect all that I have told you is in the strictest confidence. You must not breathe a word to any one."

"I shall not forget."

Great was the consternation the next day when it was known that old Sir Hugh had had to fly, leaving the estate, everything to his creditors.

But sympathy was blended with fierce indignation on the news being circulated that the chief creditor, being sole mortgagee and holder of a bill of sale, was Lawyer Maythorpe, the man who owed everything to the Northall family. But the rage of Silverweir reached its height when it learned before the day was out that Lawyer Maythorpe had taken possession of Holmbeech, and from thence was making arrangements with Sir Hugh's creditors.

"Ah, he'll clear them all off in his own fashion, and make himself sure and comfortable."

"That fellow at Holmbeech! A mushroom, an upstart, while poor Sir Hugh and pretty Miss Ella are exiles! It's shameful! There's no more altering a lawyer's nature than changing a leopard's spots!"

Such and less flattering remarks were made respecting the doings of Lawyer Maythorpe. Sometimes they were uttered in his hearing.

It had no other effect upon him, however, than to cause a smile, while he laughed outright, as at a very good joke, when he heard that the poorer class of Silverweir intended to show their abhorrence of his conduct by burning him in effigy on the fifth of November.

"As long as they don't burn me in reality I shan't mind," he remarked.

And when the enormous bonfire was kindled on the common, near the old church, and just as the effigy had fallen, making a terrible blaze around the stake to which it had been fastened, lo and behold! there, through the volumes of smoke, was seen Lawyer Maythorpe on horseback, apparently enjoying the fun as much as any of them.

He was then and there pronounced to have a heart of stone. Even the creditors called him the hardest man they had ever known, and pittied Sir Hugh.

Lawyer Maythorpe quibbled and reasoned over the smallest item. He showed the Baronet's utter poverty; and growling, the creditors had to submit.

"He makes us take anything, while he secures himself. Poor Sir Hugh, to get into the clutches of such a hard-hearted skinflint," said one.

Meanwhile the intelligence had fallen as abruptly and unexpectedly upon Sir Hugh. In a letter friendly enough worded, Lawyer Maythorpe had informed the Baronet how he had become sole mortgagee, in order that Sir Hugh might be in less danger. That he had kept the matter secret, aware that the Baronet might, out of delicacy, have found it more difficult to press for time from a friend than a stranger.

Now, however, as he desired to come to an arrangement with his creditors, Lawyer Maythorpe had claimed his own, rather than see the place torn piecemeal by the others.

"But, be assured, I will do everything I can for your interest," he continued.

"My interest!" exclaimed the Baronet, angry, pained, as he threw the letter down. "Rather his own!"

"What is the matter, papa, dear?" asked Ella.

"We have lost the old estate. The mortgagee has foreclosed, and Maythorpe is now owner of Holmbeech."

"Mr. Maythorpe! Oh, papa!—and by what right?"

"The right, Ella, of buying up all the mortgages. Oh, his claim is good. And I dare say he did let me off more easily than others might have done. But when all grabbed for themselves, why, he had grabbed too. Like the world!—like the world!"

"You don't—you can't mean, papa, that we are never to go back to Holmbeech," exclaimed Ella, tearfully.

"Never, pet; unless Maythorpe would rent it to us! Then we have not the money. I wish you could marry a millionaire, dear."

Ella's fair cheeks turned crimson—the Baronet fancied from indignation, for she exclaimed, "and Lawyer Maythorpe has done this! I would never have believed it?"

"Nor I. But everybody's maxim in this world is 'each for himself.' He might have felt some gratitude—some pity. I have so few years to live, he might have let me pass them in the old place where I was born. There, there!" dashing away a tear; "am I a schoolboy to believe in gratitude of the sentimental kind? I daresay Maythorpe thinks he has done me favors enough to cover the past—and if he didn't take Holmbeech, another would. Come, come, pet,"—for Ella was weeping bitterly on his shoulder—"Take heart. It's a consolation that I did all I could; and if the place must go, it must. Only I am sorry Maythrope should have done it. I expected better of him."

The loss of Holmbeech was a severe blow to both father and daughter, and despite their efforts to sustain each other, the day passed very wearily.

They were seated on the shore of Nice, silently, their thoughts being far away, watching the waves, rippling and breaking into a thousand flashing gems in the setting sun's rays, when a shadow falling across where they sat caused the girl to look up.

Instantly she gave a smile of recognition, if not of pleasure, on beholding the comer to be a tall, well-made young man of about five and twenty, who, though English, bore rather the German type in his style of dress, clear blue eyes, long fair hair, and falling moustache.

On finding himself observed, he lifted his hat, and approached a step nearer.

"This gentleman knows us, Ella," remarked the Baronet. "He has the advantage of me, my love. Who is it?'

"Do you not recollect, papa, dear? It is the gentleman who so kindly helped us at the railway station at Munich last year," she replied, softly.

"Ah, I remember. Excuse me, sir," and Sir Hugh extended his hand. "My memory is slightly defective lately. I recall you now. I am happy to see you. We seem destined to meet."

"Indeed, I am rejoiced it is so," smiled the young man, eagerly taking the Baronet's hand. "Some people are born to good luck. I begin to believe it is my case."

"May it continue to be so," sighed Sir Hugh. "There are not many in this world who can say it. Have you been long at Nice?"

"I arrived but this morning."

"And your stay?"

"Is uncertain." And furtively his looks wander towards Ella Northall. "I am master of my own time, and may wander where I please. And you, sir?"

"I am too old to be a rolling stone," was the reply, with a short laugh. "The world is over for me."

"Oh, papa, papa!" And Ella's little hands clasped the Baronet's arm, while her eyes, suffused by tears, were raised full of suffering to his face. "Think of me!"

An expression of pain and sympathy swept over Michel Golding's features. He perceived that something was wrong, and felt himself in the way. He stepped back. The movement recalled the Baronet.

"Pardon me, sir. Do not leave us. But the English mail brought me some bad news, and it is difficult for the aged to believe other than that all the world should sympathize in their troubles."

"Indeed, sir, I would—nay, I do, though not knowing their nature," responded the young man, eagerly. "I at least trust the trouble is not very serious?"

"No; it is an old story. Being deceived in the friend you most trusted, in finding him but worldly clay after all. Still, who would expect gratitude in a lawyer?"

"They are not all so very bad," replied Michel Golding. "My father was a lawyer."

"I am sorry for it," was the curt response.

Unseen Ella made an entreating sign to the young man, as Sir Hugh feebly rose. He answered with a pleasant smile.

"Perhaps he was so, sir," he rejoined, good-temperedly, "for he refused to bring me up to the profession. And that I am not a lawyer gives me courage to ask that you will favor me by accepting my arm?"

Sir Hugh looked at the young man, and laughed.

"Forgive me!" he said; though I don't deserve it. What a crabbed old fellow you must think me; yet you would hardly wonder if you knew what I have had to bear to-day. I will accept your offer with thanks. Our villa is not two hundred yards away."

On its being reached, Sir Hugh could not but ask their new friend in; and Michel Golding, who had never had Ella out of his thoughts since, by a happy chance, he had been able to render them a service at the Munich Railway station, gladly entered.

If only for preventing her father brooding on the loss of Holmbeech, Ella would have welcomed Michel's presence, but there was another reason. That first meeting impressed her equally as him; and already, as they sat under the veranda, watching the stars shining forth, one by one, their glances were revealing the secret of the young hearts over which they had to keep good guard.

"I regret to see Sir Hugh looking so ill," said Michel, on taking his leave; "I wish I could aid him. How gladly I would do so!"

"It's very kind of you, but nothing can help him," said Ella. "But your society has cheered him much."

"I may come again, then?" he questioned, quietly.

"Has not papa asked you?"

And Michel Golding went away, a little disappointed that Ella had not added her invitation to her father's. Did she like his coming only because it pleased Sir Hugh? That question, which he lacked conceit to answer, held him long awake this night. Perhaps it was to solve it that he became a daily visitor at the villa.

One evening, coming thither, he found Sir Hugh alone, asleep on the sofa. Ella was not there. Turning, however, he recognized her figure by the margin of the sea.

Swiftly and noiselessly he joined her; so noiselessly, that she, occupied by thought, was taken off her guard and looked up, tears on her cheek.

"Miss Northall," he exclaimed, much concerned, "you are in trouble. Tell me, can I do nothing? Will you believe me when I say that there is no sacrifice I would not make to save you from pain?"

"Why should I not believe?" she murmured. "You have been all that is kind to us. My trouble is the old one, Mr. Golding. I might bear it, but I fear it is killing papa."

"No, no; not that," broke in the young man tremulously. "Did he not only yesterday say he would be patient? Did we not agree that something yet might be done to preserve Holmbeech? May he not be mistaken in his thought of Lawyer Maythorpe?"

"He would believe anything possible but that," said Ella, shaking her head. "So would I."

"Oh, if I only dared speak!"

"What?" she asked, looking surprised.

"That I love you," he whispered. "That, Miss Northall, I would give the world to win you. Yet what am I that I should dare hope return—return from you, Sir Hugh Northall's daughter?'

'And,' she interrupted with a sad smile, 'a beggar! No, Mr. Golding; you are right. We are not on an equality. Last night you told papa you were wealthy—had great riches. I am penniless!'

'Miss Northall—Ella,' he exclaimed, 'surely you would not let my wealth be a barrier between us if—if you loved me?'

She did not answer; her eyes were bent on the shore. Earnestly, anxiously he gazed at her. Then, 'Ella,' he whispered, 'only tell me this; am I indifferent to you?'

'No; far from it, Mr. Golding.'

'May I hope? Do you return my love?'

'I might have done,' she replied, faintly, after a pause, 'had we been equals.'

'Equals! Then we are not?'

'Not as regards wealth, Mr. Golding. I can give my love, not sell it.'

'Sell it, Miss Northall—Ella! What do you mean? You insult yourself.'

'No, Mr. Golding, it is you. Did you not yesterday offer to give my father the means to free Holmbeech? Do you think me vain if I repeat my father's words on your departure: 'Ella, Mr. Golding loves you, but fears to come forward like a man and say it. He would put me under an obligation, and win you thus.''

Michel Golden flushed crimson.

'Miss Northall,' he said, 'I am deservedly punished by such an opinion, though I vow I do not merit it. I have perhaps held myself too low, too unworthy to hope to win you, but I made not the offer in the spirit your father states. He has misread me; but let the end show. I held you in love so superior to me, that I would have given all I possessed, as an adorer lays his offering on a holy shrine, even without return. I repeat, let the end prove.'

He turned and moved away. Ella hesitated, then called him back.

'Mr. Golding,' she murmured, 'papa has wronged you; so too have I—forgive me.'

'Forgive you! Oh, Ella, may I hope?'

'I love you!' she whispered.

With an exclamation of joy, he would have drawn her to him, but she drew back.

'No,' she remarked; 'I love you, but papa must decide whether I may become yours.'

'May I ask him, Ella, dearest?'

'Yes.'

But the question had to be deferred. Sir Hugh was far too excited on their return, owing to a telegram which had arrived from Lawyer Maythorpe, requesting his presence at once on important business at Holmbeech.

'Can the fellow want me there to show me how he lords it?' exclaimed the Baronet. 'Can he ask me there to turn me out again? Impossible! We shall see—we shall see!'

And the next day the father and daughter, with Michel Golding in attendance, set out for England.

On reaching Silverweir, a November fog enveloped everything, so that the little party passed through the town unrecognized until they reached Holmbeech, where they entered the old dusky hall, rich with the red light of a glowing fire. Lawyer Maythorpe was there, by a table covered with papers. He rose to greet them warmly, but the Baronet gave him chill greeting. 'You meet me coldly, Sir Hugh,' he said, smiling. 'Well, the people here gave me different treatment, for they burned me in effigy. It is the fate of some men to be misunderstood for a time; it was to your advantage that I should be.'

'Mine, Maythorpe?' said the Baronet, dryly.

'Certainly not for mine, Sir Hugh. As your chief creditor, I have well, and, I think satisfactorily, settled with the rest. You are free of debt.'

'And Holmbeech?'

'Here are the mortgage papers and the bill of sale. There is the amount you are indebted to me. You are an honorable man and will, I know, settle by degrees. As to these,' taking the bill of sale and mortgages, 'thus do I pay my debt of gratitude.'

And he placed them on top of the blazing logs.

'What!' cried the Baronet. 'Maythorpe, what do you mean?'

'Simply, Sir Hugh, that if I had burned those papers before you had settled with your creditors, they would have seized everything. You have no creditors now; the place is yours.'

'No creditors but you, old friend, whom I can never repay,' ejaculated the Baronet, taking the lawyer's hands. 'Oh, Maythorpe, how I have misunderstood you! Forgive me!'

And Sir Hugh, overcome, averted his head to hide the tears flowing down his cheeks.

'May I come in?' asked a voice.

'Certainly, Michel. Sir Hugh, Miss Ella, let me introduce to you my nephew.'

'Your nephew, Maythorpe?'

'No other, Sir Hugh. Pray do not imagine that there has been either plot or conspiracy. He saw Miss Northall at Munich, also once here, and—I do not wonder at it—he loved her. I told him if he had the temerity to woo it had better be as a stranger, for, being under the cloud I was with Sir Hugh, I did not think that my nephew could meet with much welcome; and I ask you now, as a favor, not to let what I have done bias you. You are, and ever have been, the master of Holmbeech. Michel is no worthy suitor for your heiress.'

'Let Ella decide that,' said the Baronet. 'If I have a word to say it will be, Michel Golding, in your favor. I do not forget Nice.'

'What do you say, Ella?' asked the young man.

'Have I not said already,' she smiled and blushed, 'that all depends on papa?'

The news of the Northall's return to Holmbeech ran through Silverweir like electricity; everybody seemed to know about it at once, and everybody knew the part Lawyer Maythorpe had had in keeping the place for the family. The little town went wild with remorse, and burnt bonfires in his honor.

'I really thought dear Holmbeech had gone,' smiled Ella, as, with Michel Golding she watched the rejoicings.

'Instead of which,' responded her lover, gayly, "it was lost only to save."

Every plantation and neighborhood in the South has one or more exhorter or class leader, who is regarded by his set as leader in everything, and there is often a great deal of jealousy and rivalry between these pulpit orators. Two recently met on a Georgia plantation, when the following conversation was overheard: "Good mawning, Brudder Sims." "Mawnin', sir; dat's Brudder Slappey, I believe—how do you do dis mawnin'?" "Jes' tolerable—how's you?" "I'm so's to be 'bout, thanks to de Lawd!" "You gwine to stay 'bout here to-night, Brudder Sims?" "Well, I dunno; I's jes' passin' 'bout wid Mr. ——, an' I dunno wher'er we will git outen de settlement 'fo' night or no." "Well, I jes' dars you to stay on dis plantashun an' meet me down at de chu'ch to-night. I's done heerd 'bout yo' braggin' as how you could beat me er preachin'' an' now I jes' wants to git you down to de chu'ch waunst, an' I'll show you wher'er you can beat me a preachin' or not." "Yes, I can beat you, too, an' fur as dat's concerned, I'd like to stay an' lay it onto you, but I dunno if I can be wid you to-night, I's been heerin' 'bout yo' braggin' too, an' I'd jes' like to git de chance to show you wher'er I can preach or not." "Well, den jes' stay over if you dar—stay over; dat's all I wants you to do." "Sartin I will if I can, and if I can't I's gwine to meet you, Providence permitt'n, de very naixt chance I gits; an' when I does git er hold of you I'll show you dat I wasn't called o' de Lawd for nuth'n."

The proneness, not to use a stronger word, of merchants to advertise in every little catch-penny affair in the shape of a special publication, is well known and realized by all proprietors of legitimate newspapers. It is not surprising, therefore, to note the appearance of a little weekly sheet on Chapel street yesterday, well filled with the advertising favors of many merchants of respectability and character. The sheet itself is filled with personal gossip of the most scurrilous sort, scarcely an item in it not being open to a libel suit for defamation. Not one advertiser in ten represented in its columns, would knowingly have patronized a publication of such low character, but the opportunities of the irresponsible canvasser have caught them in most disreputable company. The class of people who buy a paper of such character is not the class of people that are purchasers to any great extent of their wares, and they are not persons with families to supply with the necessities or luxuries of life. They are an unthinking class of young people, generally, who are much more apt to have the necessities of life supplied them by parents and guardians. The moral of this is simple and plain: Patronize the legitimate and well established newspaper, and you will never find your advertisement inserted beside a column of slanderous items that will make all clean-minded and sensible men and women blush for shame.—New Haven, Conn., Register.

A Baptist minister in Versailles, Ky., has succeeded in locating hell approximately. In the course of a recent sermon, reported in the Louisville Courier-Journal, the Rev. Dr. Woolfolk remarked: "Every star is a burning world. Our sun is one of the smaller of these stars, being only a million miles in diameter, and science in its recent advances has made known to us much respecting its constitution. It is one of the yellow stars. It is far advanced in the process of consolidation, and its light and heat are much less intense than formerly, its rays, perhaps, being absorbed and rendered yellow by the imperfect combustion of its gases. The white stars have much more intense combustion—their furious heat consuming all gases, and emitting a bright, vivid light. But even with a less intense combustion of our sun, there are jets of flame which gush up from its center to a height of 70,000 miles in half an hour, and terrific storms of flame which sweep across the surface at the rate of 100,000 miles an hour." Some such world as this, the preacher believed, would be the future abode of the lost—a fiery realm of outer darkness.

No use for Pennies. Eastern man—"Is it possible that you folks do not use pennies in the west!"

Western man—"Never see 'em at all; nothing smaller than nickels."

Eastern man—"Well, well, what do you do when you go to church?"

"Western man. "We don't go."—Tid Bits.

"What is time?" asked a teacher of a class of small boys. Nobody answered, and the teacher asked again, and a little Connecticut avenue chap held up his hand. "Well, Tommie, that's a good boy; now tell the class what time is." "It's what papa never comes on at night. I heard mamma say so."—New Haven News.

M. F. Tupper says: "Our ancestors had clocks put on the outside of churches, that they might not be late in getting to service. We put the clocks inside the churches, lest we be late in getting out."

REVS. SAM JONES and Sam Small finished their revival work in Boston last Sunday. They have preached to immense and attentive audiences, but there has been no large ingathering of converts.

CONGRESS has more important appropriation bills to act upon yet than ever before at this stage of the session, and there is enough work to be done in the closing days of the session to open the way for a great deal of loose legislation.

SPRINGFIELD'S bicycle club has voted not to hold the usual fall tournament this year. Has President Ducker slid out all his enthusiasm on the toboggan? The tournament has become such an established institution that Springfield will hardly be herself without it.

IT is estimated that from January 11 to February 10 strikers have lost $2,650,000 in wages directly, and $350,000 indirectly, while the loss to capital is roughly estimated at about $4,000,000. The disastrous folly of strikes could not be better shown than by these figures, and it would be well if every workingman could be made to understand their full import.

A BIG STRIKE seems imminent in the silk mill at Patterson, N. J., where the Knights of Labor have taken it into their heads that none but members of their order shall work in the mills. It is not a question of wages nor of hours, but simply one of control. When it comes to this there can be no question who will win. If the employers cannot hire whom they chose they will undoubtedly close their mills until such a time as they can.

A BILL passed by Congress appropriating $10,000 for seeds to be distributed among the farmers in the drouth-stricken counties of Texas has been vetoed by the president. He gives sound reasons for his doctrine, saying:—

> I can find no warrant for such an appropriation in the constitution; and I do not believe that the power and duty of the general government ought to be extended to the relief of individual suffering which is in no manner properly related to the public service or benefit. The lesson should be constantly enforced that though the people support the government, the government should not support the people.

THE new Hampden county jail was thrown open to the inspection of the public last Saturday, and the people who thronged its corridors from top to bottom were much more pleased with its appearance than is likely to be the case with the unfortunates who will soon take up their abode there. There are 200 cells for men, 56 for women and 6 for solitary confinement. It has all the modern appliances, and in a short time everybody who opposed its erection will wonder how the county ever got along without it.

IT has been judicially decided by Judge Blodgett, in the U. S. district court at Chicago that it is not libelous to call a man a "crank." He says:—

> It must be conceded that to call a person a "crank" is not objectionable. It is not a word which by its meaning in the English language implies that a person has been guilty of a crime or exposes him to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy; or which would tend to injure him in his trade or profession. It is not libel on a man who has entered the field of authorship to underrate his talents.

A good many blooming authors will feel very much like choking the judge when they read that closing sentence.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND deserves the gratitude of the country for vetoing the last pension bill, which men of both parties in Congress dared not vote against, lest their party should lose votes in the next campaign. Congressmen are more afraid of the soldiers' ballots than the rebels were of their bullets, and almost any sort of pension scheme is sure to go through both houses with a rush. It is therefore a fortunate thing for the country that the president has a little backbone in the matter. Our soldiers are better provided for now than those of any other country, and there is no sort of justice in asking the government to pension a man who may have carried a rifle for three months in the war, because of some sickness which has come upon him twenty-odd years later.

Missionary Hume has virtually won his case in his contest with the prudential committee of the American Board, as that body has directed him to return to his field of labor. Great efforts were made to get him to retract the obnoxious views on the "hypothesis of probation," but to no avail. The committee yields most reluctantly and not too graciously, but the pressure was overwhelming.

A horrible accident occurred on a toboggan slide at Rutland, Vt., Monday evening, when James C. Barrett, a prominent lawyer, was impaled on the pointed end of a board which had split off the side of the slide, projecting upward into the slide. The board entered the inside of his thigh and came out through his back, above the hip, inflicting injuries which of course proved fatal.

Jesse Arnold, of St. Louis, whose livery stables with 100 horses were burned on Wednesday night, was a sentimental patriot. He built the hearse in which the remains of Abraham Lincoln were conveyed to the tomb, and since that day it has never been used, as Mr. Arnold declared that it should never be profaned by any meaner use. The hearse was burned in the stable.

All the bodies recovered from the White River disaster have now been identified. The railroad commissioners state that 37 bodies in all were found.

LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY.

The anniversary of President Lincoln's birth was observed by the pupils of the high school on Monday. An invitation had been extended to friends to be present, and a large number appeared, all seeming to enjoy the exercises, which certainly did the pupils great credit, although very little preparation had been made, some of the parts having been assigned only the previous Friday. ST. PAUL'S CHURCH CHOIR CONCERT.

About 225 of our people braved the fog and mud to attend the concert at St. Paul's church last Friday evening, and were well paid for the effort. Mr. Trask, as usual, rendered his numbers with the ease and finish of an artist, and responded to the applause in a very pleasing manner. Mrs. Slocum, with her crystal chimes, delighted her hearers, and in her rendering of the trio with Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Huntley showed she had not lost the power of song. Miss Barnes as pianist was very acceptable, both to the audience and singers; in her solo parts the execution was not mechanical, but showed that a love for music inspired the effort, while with the voices she did not forget—as many do—she was playing only an accompaniment. With pleasure we refer to home talent. Mrs. Wallace, although suffering from a cold, rendered her "waltz song" with a brilliancy and finish that was artistic, and won the enthusiasm of her hearers. She responded very pleasantly. Mrs. Huntley, in her "New Kingdom," took the audience with her, and for the time they forgot themselves in their interest for "the two little friendless children." As an encore she sang "The Old Barn Window, John." Longfellow's "Bridge" was rendered by Mr. Ely in a clear and earnest manner, and was pleasantly received. He was called back and responded heartily. The other numbers were well rendered and heartily applauded. As a whole the programme was classical and pleasing, and much credit is due those who arranged and carried it out so successfully, and the general remark is "we hope they will try again."

The interest at the rink to-morrow evening will center in a five-mile race between Fletcher of Lowell and Smith of Westfield, for the championship of Western Massachusetts. Smith is only about 17, but has never been beaten, and a good deal of money is already up on the race.

"Robert Emmet" was well rendered to a full house last Friday evening, and the Social Club did considerable more than cover expenses. The drama is not well suited to amateurs, but Murdock as "Emmet" showed a clear conception and gave a dignified rendering; "O'Leary" was the soldier of the olden time, and found in Cahill a good portrayer; "Kernan" the traitor, was done in speaking lines and excellent facial play by M. W. Reilly. Messrs. Fuller and Garland and Miss Burns filled smaller parts satisfactorily, but "Darby" and "Judy" gave us a true glimpse of the "auld sod." In song and dance, make-up and delicious brogue the pair were great.

There were 427 present at the evening schools in different parts of the village Wednesday evening.

The funeral of Otis Lane was largely attended Monday afternoon. The stores were nearly all closed from 1.30 to 3.30.

The fourth sermon of the series on Unitarianism by Rev. B. V. Stevenson, will be given next Sunday afternoon. Subject: "Repentance."

Mrs. Kimball, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, gave an interesting address at the town hall Tuesday evening, to a large audience.

M. V. Howard has bought the Willard Andrews place for about $3000, but will not give up the painting business, keeping his shop in the village as usual.

Several hundred Italians at work on the railroad struck Wednesday because they thought that they were charged too much for the use of one of the shanties in which they live.

Rev. Mr. Dwight of Constantinople gave an interesting address at the chapel last Sunday evening on the "Mission Work in Turkey." He is connected with the publishing department of the mission work.

The Ware Musical Society are to give their closing concert of the season at the Congregational chapel next Tuesday evening. The programme is an especially pleasing one, and we hope they will be well patronised.

Rev. Hugh Montgomery of Worcester will give a temperance lecture at the town hall March 14. Mr. Montgomery has made things lively at Worcester by his temperance work. The rumsellers would no doubt be glad to kill him if they dared.

There was a union missionary gathering at the chapel on Wednesday evening. The Gilbertville society and Mount Herman band of Ware met with the Young Ladies' Missionary society of the East Congregational church. There was a literary entertainment, and a pleasant social time.

Miss Claire Scott and her dramatic company, which gave so universal satisfaction when here a short time since, are booked at the town hall again for to-morrow evening, when they will present "Lucretia Borgia." This company is pronounced by those who heard them to be one of the best ever in town.

As the time for the annual town meeting approaches, we expect communications from our citizens expressing their ideas as to how the affairs of the town should be managed. All right, hand them in. But when the time for voting comes, don't fail to give a large no license vote.

A party of nearly 100 of the striking Italians came down Main street this morning in a procession, making considerable disturbance. The police attempted to arrest the ringleaders, but were resisted with clubs. Several shots were fired by the police, one fellow receiving a ball in the back, and was then arrested, when the crowd dispersed. A posse of officers started in pursuit, and no doubt other arrests will be made during the day.

Mr. Cote of the French Protestant mission, who has been here for some months past, will preach for the last time next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the chapel on Church street, where their meetings are held for the present. The rooms over Dr. Miner's drug store have been rented for an office.

The ladies of the Social Science society have placed in the postoffice a box for the collection of literature. There is a great call for reading matter, both by the pupils in the schools and by many families. A committee consisting of Mrs. H. O. Robinson, Mrs. W. H. Hall and Mrs. F. D. Gilmore has been appointed to receive and distribute all contributions. Any person having books, papers or magazines which they have finished reading will confer a great favor by dropping them in this box, or by leaving them with any of the committee.

The Nashville Students, the celebrated plantation singers, will give a concert at the town hall next Tuesday evening. The Nashville World says of them: "It is astonishing what pathos, what soul-stirring beauty, dwells in the voice of these black-skinned songsters. By nature they are endowed with the soul of music; by culture this genius has been under perfect control, and for melody, for sweetness of voice, for correct time, for expression of true vocal sentiment, their quaint, weird-like refrains brought back to memory visions of old plantation days, camp-meetings, breakdowns, fields and forests of our ante-bellum Sunny South.

Fred Howard, formerly of Ware, and Dockam, the celebrated hunter and trapper of the northwest, propose through W. V. Howard to present to the library a genuine birch bark canoe that they traded steel traps to a Pottawatomie Indian by the name of Johnny Wildcat for last summer, on a 4-months' hunting trip on the head waters of the Wisconsin and Lake Superior region. It is made of one piece of birch bark, lined and riked with cedar. Messrs. Howard and Doekam made the trip from the head waters of the Wisconsin to Baraboo, a distance of nearly 500 miles, in this canoe, running rapids and making portages, one of 11 miles. Fred Howard made the trip from Fort Benton, Dakota, down the Missouri river to Kansas City, a year ago last summer, alone, in his canvas canoe, a distance of over 1200 miles, doing his own cooking and camping where night overtook him.

A mooted question which should be considered by the town at the next annual meeting is whether the fire district should not be abolished and the fire department be extended over the whole town. The present fire district comprises the main part of the town in population and in valuation. The cost of maintaining two separate organizations is too great for any advantage derived. The town owns the water works, hydrants, etc.; the fire district owns the engines, hose, Fireman's Hall, etc., including a good steam fire engine useful almost in any part of the town. The plan should be for the fire district to give up to the town all its fire apparatus and property which is all valuable and in first rate repair and order, and worth from $12,000 to $18,000. All this property would cost the town nothing. The town owning the water, hydrants, etc., when these interests are united, we have a first-class apparatus for extinguishing fire in all parts of the town where any effort could be made useful. There can scarcely be a locality or individual in town not in some way more or less interested in the fire department of the town.

A CITIZEN.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, FEB. 16th, 1887.

The course of the Republicans upon the resolve to abolish the poll tax as a suffrage qualification will not be uniform with all members of the party. In the Senate Thursday afternoon, Senator Morse of Norfolk opposed the resolve in a long speech. No other senator spoke, and the measure was ordered to a third reading, the yeas and nays being refused. Further debate on the subject was assigned to Tuesday, and a yea and nay roll call was taken. Thursday afternoon also, the House Republicans held a conference on the matter in the green room, after adjournment. No vote was taken or desired, but the members were apparently about evenly divided. If the Republicans should go half one way and half the other, the vote would be very close, for the Democrats all favor the measure; a two-thirds' vote is required and the Republicans are just about two-thirds of the whole body.

On Tuesday afternoon the Senate took its last vote on the amendment. As required by the constitution, the vote was by yeas and nays. It resulted thus:

YEAS: Boardman, Clark, Cook, Currier, Dwyer, Fernald, Fletcher, Forbes, Gleason of Plymouth, Howard, Jenkins, Jones of Berkshire, Jones of Essex, Jordan, O'Sullivan, Perkins, Phillips, Reed, Roods, Shea, Slattery Welch.

NAYS: Glines, Keith of Plymouth, Jefts, Marble, Morse, Pillsbury.

The Senate also adopted an order for investigating the Boston city government. The vote was 17 to 14. No Democrat voted yes and no Republican voted no, except Senator Jordan of Suffolk and Phillips of Hampden.

Most of Tuesday afternoon was devoted by the House to the bill to repeal the law which forbids the pigeon-holing of appealed liquor cases. After attempts had failed to refer the bill to the liquor committee and to table it, a rising vote stood 92 to 92 on ordering to a third reading. Speaker Noyes voted yes. Then a roll call was ordered and the bill was defeated by 81 to 103, and five pairs.

The terrible catastrophe in Vermont has set people to thinking about new ways of heating and lighting cars, and a very interesting hearing was given on the matter by the railroad committee Thursday forenoon. A representative of the Connecticut River road, where the system is in operation, says it is perfectly feasible to heat by steam and there would be no danger from explosions or furnaces.

On Thursday the House, in a good-natured mood, admitted by an almost unanimous vote, under a suspension of the rules, four items of new business which otherwise would have gone to the next Legislature, but on Friday the Senate summarily refused to admit three of the four, and laid the fourth on the table to be examined. This is the only way to prevent the session from being prolonged by new business, and the Senate has rightly been stricter than the House. This does not mean, of course, that a petition will be thrown out if good reason is given for not presenting it earlier. Afterward the Senate seemed to find good reasons, and admitted two others of the matters.

Mr. Graves of Groton told the House judiciary committee Friday that he did not care to press his order for an investigation into lobbying for Senator Dawes's reëlection by Treasurer Beard and Adin Thayer. What he wanted was to call attention to the matter, and he really objected more to Mr. Beard's activity against biennials last year than to what he did this year.

Friday morning the public health committee heard those who want to reduce the milk standard to 12 per cent of solids instead of 13. They made a pretty forcible demonstration, and the farmers should have their eyes open.

On Tuesday Secretary Russell of the state board of agriculture sent to the House of Representatives the annual report of the visitors of the agricultural college. In it, it appears that for the first time has any decision been made as to the respective duties of the trustees and overseers. But now this has been done by the governor and council, under the law of 1866. The trustees are the executive officers of all the immediate affairs of the college, while the overseers are visitors to inspect the institution and its courses of instruction, to make an annual visit at commencement, and to present a report to the Legislature. The report says the library has a capacity of 20,000 volumes, but has only 5500, and it recommends an appropriation of $1000 for books. The farm is said to have been improved both in drainage and buildings, and there will be about 80 acres of grass the coming season, instead of 40 as last season.

The only election contest of the year, that for the seat of Mr. O'Connor of Worcester, has been decided in favor of the incumbent, as he was found to have 13 plurality. The interesting point is that the committee unanimously threw out votes on which the name of the office voted for had been carelessly covered by stickers.

The Legislature is beginning to realize that it has an immense amount of work to do, but it has not yet found out how to take it up to the best advantage. During this week the committees have been sitting afternoons considerably, because the sessions of the House and Senate are so short. In this respect they are doing more than any recent Legislature, but it does not make up for the failure to report heavy measures to the branches, and so give them something to do. Wednesday afternoon a meeting of the committee on expediting business was held in the speaker's room, but nothing was done more than to talk matters over.

The petition for a state normal music school, which was also recommended by Governor Ames in his inaugural address, has been further reinforced by the names of some of the best musicians in the state, including Prof. John K. Paine of Harvard University, S. B. Whitney and B. J. Lang. Mrs. Lucy Stone and Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner are also among the petitioners.

At the insurance hearing Wednesday forenoon, the revision of Commissioner Tarbox was severely criticised in some parts by two of the leading insurance men of the country—Col. Jacob L. Greene of Hartford, and Charlton T. Lewis of New York, though the latter complimented the commissioner warmly for his effort to be just.

LANDON.

The Kansas Legislature has passed a bill, by a large majority, securing municipal suffrage to women.

Boston Corbett, who killed John Wilkes Booth, Lincoln's assassin, and has been doorkeeper of the Kansas House of Representatives, went crazy Tuesday, and with two revolvers run things his own way, finally sending word to the House to adjourn or he would adjourn it himself. The House directly followed his directions, and after a while he was captured and disarmed.

It is predicted that the "Star of Bethlehem" will appear this year for the sixth time since the birth of Christ. This star is said to appear directly north of the north star, and to be visible, in its dazzling light, at noonday. It is a sola orb, many times the magnitude of our sun, whose orbit is yet uncalculated by any astronomer.

O'Neill, another of the precious boodle aldermen of New York, has been sentenced to imprisonment for four years and to pay a fine of $2000.

The roof of the state house at St. Paul, Minn., is in such a dangerous condition that the Legislature meets in a hall.

This is to give notice that all the citizens troubled with coughs or colds should procure a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and take it at once.

Women's rubbers for 20 and 25 cents, kid custom boots for $2—formerly sold for $3. Men's Woonsocket pure gum boots, at $2.98, and Wales buckle artics for 95 cents. All looks as though the Broadhurst Bros., (Morse Shoe Store) Springfield, Mass., mean to give their customers a clean $2000 during their sale of shop-worn shoes this month.

PROPRIETARY MEDICINES.

A visit to Dr. Green's Laboratory at Woodbury, N. J., has considerably changed our views, and especially our prejudices in regard to what are generally known as "Standard Patent Medicines." Of course we are getting to that age in life when we are forced to conclude Life itself is a humbug, and naturally distrust anything that has not withstood long and tried experiences. Being a physician I had the curiosity to know how such a sale of two medical preparations could be sustained for so many years. The perfect system upon which the business is conducted, and the pharmaceutical arrangements for the manufacture of the two recipes with which we were made acquainted, are sufficiently convincing to us that the AUGUST FLOWER for dyspepsia and liver complaints, and BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP for throat and lung troubles, were for the complaints they are recommended, most excellent remedies, and only regret that in much of our practice, medical ethics prevent us from prescribing them without making the formulas public. When shown the great quantity of voluntary letters having been forwarded Dr. Green, from all parts of the country, and from all classes of people, lawyers, ministers and doctors, giving a description of their ailments, testimonials of their cures, etc., I feel like endorsing Dr. Green's suggestion that the government accept such valuable formulas, and license them for general use by giving protection to the inventor same as patents generally.—Copied from N. Y. Druggists' Circular of Oct., 1886.

R. S. B. Hatch of Lebanon Springs, N. Y., is 82 years old. He says: "I suffered from Liver Complaint for thirty years and could not obtain relief. I was persuaded to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and it has cured me. I digest my food without difficulty and enjoy refreshing rest." Druggists; $1. Send 2-cent stamp to Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y., for his book on Kidney, Liver and Blood Disorders. Mention this paper. 4w47

WE CAUTION ALL AGAINST THEM.

The unprecedented success and merit of Ely's Cream Balm—a real cure for catarrh, hay fever and cold in the head—has induced many adventurers to place catarrh medicines bearing some resemblance in appearance, style or name upon the market, in order to trade upon the reputation of Ely's Cream Balm. Don't be deceived. Buy only Ely's Cream Balm. Many in your immediate locality will testify in highest commendation of it. A particle is applied into each nostril; no pain; agreeable to use. Price 50 cents.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phebe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, schr. Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and N. Y., had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

D. 1851, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in said Moores, until on or about October 15th, A. D. 1864, and she has ever conducted toward him as a faithful, chaste and affectionate wife, yet said Oliver Betters, regardless of his marriage vows and obligations at said Moores, on or about October fifteenth, A. Wherefore she prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between her and the said Oliver Betters may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

Grandmother's Hat.

It hangs in the attic all covered with dust,
And its once white chip surface is brown as a crust,
It oft makes a nest for the dark flying bat,
And no longer looks jaunty, my grandmother's hat.

There it rests now quite shapeless, grim, crusted and forlorn,
And the ribbons in shreds from its small sides are torn,
'Twas made in the time of this old, faded mat,
They called it a "bunnit," my grandmother's hat.

Ah! once it was tilted upon her fair head,
As she rushed down to meet him with light-footed tread,
Now it is tilted the wrong way and is dingy and flat,
Though it was once a beauty, my grandmother's hat.

It flared not with feathers, nor glittered with lace,
As it perched so demurely above her bright face;
It was dainty and modest, both words are quite pat,
And 'twas sweetly bewitching, my grandmother's hat.

With black gleaming jetting it dazzled no sight,
Nor did it uptower, like Eddystone Light;
And blessed was the man who behind it oft sat,
It ne'er hid the preacher, my grandmother's hat.

SOCIALIST UP TO A CERTAIN POINT.

I was traveling in a department of the South, after the revolution of February. I met one day a mayor of a village, proprietor of a metairie. "Sir," said he to me, "what do you mean down there at Paris by that word 'communism?' It is some sluggard's business, is it not? So, at least, our curate says." "It is a system of partition," replied I, "invented once on a time by a dreamer." "What did he dream?" "That the man who has a million should share it with the commune." His eyes brightened. "Not a bad dream, either," said he. "But further," I resumed, "that the man who has 100,000 francs should abandon the half to his neighbor." "Well, he would still have enough with the other half." "Then, that the man who has 50,000 francs should come down to 25,000 francs, through spirit of fraternity." The face of the mayor assumed a thoughtful tinge. "That may still do." "Lastly, that the man who possesses 25,000 francs—" "Twenty-five thousand francs," he interrupted, springing up with a bound, "that's the value of my farm; let him who would have a vine stock belonging to it come and seek it. He will see how I will receive him at the end of my musket.'

COFFEE IN TYPHOID FEVER.

Dr. Guillassee of the French navy, in a recent paper on typhoid fever, says: "Coffee has given us unhoped for satisfaction; after having dispensed it, we find, to our great surprise, that its action is as prompt as it is decisive. No sooner have our patients taken a few tablespoonfuls of it than their features become relaxed and they come to their senses. The next day the improvement is such that we are tempted to look upon coffee as a specific against typhoid fever. Under its influence the stupor is dispelled and the patient rouses from the state of somnolency in which he has been since the invasion of the disease. Soon all the functions take their natural course, and he enters upon convalescence." Dr. Guillassee gives to an adult two or three tablespoonfuls of strong black coffee every two hours, alternated with one or two teaspoonfuls of claret or Burgundy wine. A little lemonade or citrade of magnesia should be taken daily, and after a while quinine. From the fact that malaise and cerebral symptoms appear first, the doctor regards typhoid fever as a nervous disease, and the coffee acting on the nerves is peculiarly indicated in the early stages before local complications arise.

A SENSIBLE SUGGESTION.

In several families of our acquaintance the custom is followed of putting up a Christmas list two or three weeks previous to the day. Each member hangs up a card, on which he writes what he would like, and the watching of these lists as they appear, and the whispered consultations over them furnish a great deal of amusement. No limit is given to the imagination, and perhaps father wishes for a pair of horses, and mother writes a request for a satin dress, but with wise forethought they also put down something which little folks can get or make, like a pair of mittens or a book mark. The younger ones enjoy the indulgence of wishing, which always has its charms, and they are perfectly satisfied if two or three of the more humble requests are met. Already, by the writer's desk, hangs nine-years-old Ethel's list, which has been the result of hours of careful meditation, and includes a black kitten, a box of paints, a thimble, a little doll's tea-set, and some bright yarn. Obliging grandmother, who somehow has a suspicion of what has been hurriedly put away every time she came in, has headed her list with a knit hood.—New England Farmer.

He was the son of a worthy Chicagoan, and he had just returned from college. The father was a brusque, matter of fact man, who had no liking for anything dudish, and he noticed with sorrow that his son returned with bangs and various other insignia of dudedom. The old gentleman surveyed him critically when he appeared in his office, and then blurted out: "Young man, you look like a fool." Just at that time, and before the young man had time to make a fitting reply, a friend walked in. "Why, Hello, George, have you returned?" he asked. "Dear me, how much you resemble your father." "So he has just been telling me," replied the youth. And from that day to this the old gentleman has found no fault with bangs.—Chicago Rambler.

A little Buffalo girl was not feeling well and her parents suggested that she might be about to have chicken-pox, then prevalent. She went to bed laughing at the idea, but early next morning went into her parents' room, looking very serious, and said: "Yes, it is chicken-pox, papa: I found a fedder in the bed."—New York Sun.

A WONDERFUL SHOT.

The man who put ten bullets in succession, inside the circumference of a Milwaukee girl's finger ring at 15 paces, was a pretty good shot, but he wasn't half so wise as the bilious man who put ten of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" into his system in five days, and on the sixth walked ten miles "just because he felt so well." If your blood is out of order, if you feel low-spirited and "blue," you will find these Little Liver Pills just what you need.

Do not allow a cough or cold to get seated, but break it up at once by using Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer, the old reliable remedy for coughs, colds and all diseases of the lungs. Price, 25c., 50c. and $1 per bottle. For sale by all druggists.

Mothers, teething and fretful children need Dr. Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial. Druggists, 25 cents.

CONDITIONAL BENEVOLENCE.

A story, new to me, about eccentric Isaac Barnes, once collector at Boston and always prince of wits: His wife was a devoted Baptist. When he went to church, which was seldom, he went with her. But he always went away with a mental reservation, upon which his fancy disported itself during service, for there was only one Baptist that he liked, and that was Mrs. Barnes. Now, the Baptists were about to build a chapel, and Mrs. Barnes was interested in procuring subscriptions to that end. She spoke to Mr. Barnes about it, and as he intimated a willingness to subscribe she sent a collector to urge him further. The collector said that he understood that Mr. Barnes was willing to subscribe. Mr. Barnes said he was. The collector drew out a subscription book and offered it for Mr. Barnes's signature. "No," said Barnes, "I won't sign that book, because that isn't necessary. My word's just as good as my bond. When I say I'll subscribe I mean it. And I may as well say at once that my subscription will be $5000." This fairly took the collector's breath away, for it was almost the whole of the amount they were trying to raise. "That is a splendid gift," he managed to say after a while; "we shall be very deeply obliged." "Not at all," said Barnes; "but," he added, there is a condition to the gift." "Oh," said the collector, "I am sure any condition you might annex would be well received by our people." "I'm not so sure of that," said Barnes; "the condition is that all the people baptized in the new chapel shall be baptized in boiling hot water." "Good-morning," said the collector as he put the subscription book in his pocket and walked off.—Philadelphia Record.

JAPANESE HOTEL PECULIARITIES

In a Japanese hotel the kitchen is the principal room in the house, and near the entrance. The first thing that strikes us is the row of large blue platters arranged around the room in a shelf rack near the ceiling. I have come to regard these platters as a test of the prosperity of the house. If they are many and large—three feet across—the hotel is flourishing; if few and small, the reverse. So the first thought is, "How are the platters." We are shown our room—upstairs always, if possible—and, leaving our shoes behind, walk upon the soft mats in our stocking feet. Immediately a servant brings tea and a tray of tiny cups without saucers; then tobacco and a small fire box for smoking purposes. Now all the visitors in the house and all the neighbors who can crowd in have arrived and are in our rooms and are examining us. We think we would like to wash our hands and faces and them have something to eat, so we clap our hands three times, and a servant screams "hi," and soon appears, bowing, and asks what we want. We call for water, which is brought in a large bucket with a wooden handle, and a flat copper basin, which are placed on the front veranda. There we perform our ablutions in front of the crowd in the street below us. Little tables, about as large as a small napkin, are placed before each on the floor. We order rice, which is brought in a little tub with bright brass hoops. We ask for eggs, and thirty are brought for four persons. We use our own knives and forks, and the visitors look at us and then at each other and smile admiringly. — Correspondence of Cincinnati Enquirer.

CHILD LABOR IN THE COAL REGIONS.

The miner's boys and girls have no childhood. Hundreds of children from seven to fifteen years of age, are at work at the hard coal mines slate picking, and at the soft coal mines coke trimming and mule driving. Hard, drudging toil is the lot of these little ones, all day long, in the dust and grime of the picking shed, winter and summer. What wonder that the majority of the graves in the miner's cemetery are short ones. A stunted, defrauded childhood, a sickly and infirm youth, and a manhood old and decrepit before its time; this is not an uncommon experience among the coal workers. It is true that there is a law forbidding the employment of young children in collieries on the statute book, but the evidence is convincing that it is very rarely enforced. The poverty of the parents and the indifference of the employers stand in the way. As late as 1883 there was no compulsory school law in Pennsylvania, and if there be now, it is, like the law referred to above, almost never enforced in the coal regions. When work is slack the miner sends his boys to school, where they get all the education they ever have. At other times they, as well as their father, must work.—George A. Denison, in Work and Wages, Holyoke, Mass.

Doctor—"Oh, you are bound to get well; you can't help yourself. The Medical Record shows that out of 100 cases like yours, one per cent recovers invariably."

Patient—"That's a cheerful prospect."

Doctor—"What more do you want? I have tried ninety-nine cases and every one of the died. Why, man alive! you can't die if you try. There's no humbug about statistics."—Texas Siftings.

WHAT IS SCROFULA?

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, proves itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. Send for book of cures.

For Love's Sake.

Sometimes I am tempted to murmur
That life is flitting away,
With only a round of trifles
Filling each busy day—
Dusting nooks and corners,
Making the house look fair,
And patiently taking on me
The burden of woman's care.

Comforting childish sorrows,
And charming the childish heart
With the simple song and story,
Told with a mother's art;
Setting the dear home table,
And clearing the meal away,
And going on little errands
In the twilight of the day.

One day is just like another!
Sewing and piecing well
Little jackets and trousers,
So neatly that none can tell
Where are the seams and joinings—
Ah! the seamy side of life
Is kept out of sight by the magic
Of many a mother and wife.

And oft, when I'm ready to murmur
That time is flitting away
With the self-same round of duties
Filling each busy day,
It comes to my spirit sweetly,
With the grace of a thought divine;
You are living, toiling for love's sake,
And the living should never repine.

You are guiding the little footsteps
In the way they ought to walk,
You are dropping a word for Jesus
In the midst of your household talk;
Living your life for love's sake,
Till the homely cares grow sweet—
And sacred the self-denial
That is laid at the Master's feet

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

There has been a pastoral change in our congregation. The people, after a ten years' trial of good old Mr. Wharton and his amiable wife, came to the conclusion that a different kind of a preacher, with a different kind of a wife, would vastly improve their spiritual condition. There was a lack of strength about Mr. Wharton (so it was alleged), and certain prominent ladies of the church had wished (aloud) so often that Mrs. Wharton were less old-fashioned in her ways, that a change sooner or later, had become a settled thing in the minds of a majority. It was simply a question of time; and time settled the question. The change came. Old Mr. Wharton and his wife retired, and Rev. Mr. Newton and his wife took their places in the pastorate of the congregation—I say "Mr. Newton and his wife," for our people think, or used to think, that, when they "hired a minister," they hired his wife too, and regarded her duties among them in quite as high a light as they did those of her husband.

I happened to be away from the village at the time this change was made, and did not return until after Mr. Newton and his wife had been doing duty for something over three months.

"How do you like the new minister?" was among the first of inquiries.

"He is a charming preacher," was the reply I received on every hand. Yet I saw, by the manner of my friends, that some drawback existed.

"How do you like his wife?"

Ah! The little mystery was explained. Mr. Newton was well enough. But his wife!

"What kind of a woman is she?" I asked.

"Don't know. Can't make her out," was the vague answer I received. "Why, she don't take a particle of interest in the church. Hasn't been to one of the monthly concerts for prayer; nor to the weekly sewing circle; nor even to the Sabbath school. We calculated entirely on on her taking the senior girls' class which Mrs. Wharton taught for so many years; and a committee of ladies waited on her with an invitation to do so; but she actually declined, saying that she had neither taste nor aptitude for teaching! Now what do you think of that for a minister's wife! Did you ever hear the beat of it?"

Two or three days' intercourse with the members of the congregation satisfied me that Mrs. Newton would not do for the Church of St. Charity. When and where this lady was sainted I have never learned. I have my suspicion that Miss Phœbe Lane, who rechristened the parish on the occasion of building our new church, was not particularly well read in the Saintish Calendar. But let that pass. Ours was the Church of St. Charity. Mr. Newton was a delightful man! Such a preacher! So active in all the interests of our society! So pious! So humble-minded! But his wife! No woman could be less suited to her condition. It was even doubted if she were a professor! Phœbe Lane was positive about it; and averred that she didn't believe there was a spark of piety in her soul. How a man like Mr. Newton could ever have mated himself with such a wife was regarded by Miss Lane as one of the inexplicable mysteries. A man like Mr. Newton, who might have had his choice among women!"

I went to the church with no ordinary feeling of interest on the Sabbath following my return. Five minutes before the time for the service to begin, a lady, just above the medium height, beautifully formed, and with a step of blended grace and dignity, passed along the aisle leading a child by the hand, and took her seat in the minister's pew. Though not in any sense gaily dressed, there was a style and air about her that by no means indicated a pious disregard of worldly things. Taste had evidently presided in her toilet. The lady did not look around her, nor show the slightest sign of interest in the people. How different in all things was her appearance and bearing from the good, kind, compliant Mrs. Wharton, whose pleasant, almost smiling face I had seen in that pew for so many years—a face turning, as by instinct, its mild sunlight ever and anon upon the congregation, while her husband broke for them the Bread of Life!

The contrast was hardly agreeable.

"She'll never do!" whispered a lady-shadow of Miss Lane's, bending to my ear from the pew just behind the one I occupied. "Proud as Lucifer, any one can see! Such airs won't do for St. Charity."

Very still, almost like a statue, sat Mrs. Newton, the minister's wife, and I could see that the child, a little girl six or seven years old, leaned very close to her.

I was particularly pleased with Mr. Newton. His sermon, in contrast with the usual discourses I had listened to from the lips of Mr. Wharton, was a masterpiece of eloquence. No one seemed to listen to him with more rapt attention than did Mrs. Newton.

At last the services closed, and the time came when my restless curiosity was to be satisfied. The minister's wife turned her face to the congregation, and I had a view of every feature. It was a face once seen to be remembered. Classic almost to severity in its outline, the full lips and soft hazel eyes gave to it a gentle expression. You saw at a glance that she was a woman of thought as well as feeling.

A few ladies gathered around her as she stepped from the pew, and I noticed that her countenance lit up very pleasantly as she spoke to them. But there was nothing obsequious; no undue familiarity, no wordy affability. A certain air of dignity and self respect marked every attitude of her person and every expression of her countenance. All vulgar familiarity toward her was out of the question. I saw that at a glance.

But only a few ladies in the congregation ventured to approach her. In the eyes of many she was proud, and they were not "going to force themselves upon her notice." The prejudice admitted into their minds by others made them shun rather than court her acquaintance.

"How do you like the new minister's wife?" was almost the first question.

"Can't say. Must know something about her first," I answered.

"She'll not do for us," said my friend warmly. She is not the woman for St. Charity."

"What is the defect," I inquired.

"It is all defect!" was the sweeping reply. "Just look at her! A pretty thing for a minister's wife, indeed! Why she carries herself with the air of a queen!"

"Mr. Newton is a charming speaker. I never heard a more beautiful sermon," I remarked.

"Oh, Mr. Newton is splendid, replied my friend, warmly. "But his wife! Oh, dear! it is dreadful! What could have possessed him to marry such a woman! She will never suit in the world—never, never! Why, I don't believe she is even a professor. She didn't stay to the communion on last Sunday! Just think of that—and she's the minister's wife. It has been the talk of the congregation ever since! We fully expected her to take a class in the Sunday school—but no! We invited her to be present at our sewing circle—but no; she could not leave her children! A mere excuse of course! Then we elected her president of our Indian Missionary society; she declined the honor, saying that she had neither time nor taste for such public duties; with her charity for the present must begin at home. Now, isn't that a Christian spirit for you? Our minister's wife to talk of charity beginning at home! Why, she's a heathen!"

My church friend waxed warm.

Without "variableness or shadow of turning," as St. Paul says, did Mrs. Newton keep on her way. Home was her parish, and she was content to do her duty there. Occasionally she accepted an invitation to take tea and spend an evening abroad; but in most cases she declined these pleasant entertainments, and though over three months had passed there had yet been no tea-drinking at the parsonage. Mr. Newton on the other hand, mingled very freely with his congregation—sat with them at their tables, and joined them in their social gatherings. Of course, the the absence of Mrs. Newton on these occasions always formed an object of remark, and it was generally voted that her failure to accompany her husband seriously marred the pleasure of the evening.

"Ah, if his wife were only like him."

This was invariably the sighing ejaculation of Miss Phœbe Lane, or some one of her party.

At last the matter assumed so serious a shape in the minds of certain leading ladies in the parish that it was determined to wait upon Mrs. Newton and remonstrate with her on the course of conduct she was pursuing—"a course of conduct," urged Miss Lane, "that is working untold injury to our church. Ever since she came here a change for the worse has been going on in the congregation. Members are growing cold or indifferent. Our sewing circles are losing their interest, the monthly concerts of prayer are badly attended, and the Sabbath school are dwindling away. The social sphere, always so warm and attractive under the genial influence of good Mrs. Wharton, is fast losing its power—and all from this strange conduct on the part of our minister's wife; she must be talked to on the subject. If she doesn't know her duty she must be taught it. If she won't hear her husband, she must hear the congregation."

A committee of ladies—Miss Lane at the head of them, and voluntary spokeswoman, finally undertook to set Mrs. Newton right in regard to her duties to the parish of St. Charity, and formally opened upon her for that purpose. Curiosity prompted me to accept an offered membership on that committee. Let me picture the interview with Mrs. Newton.

We found her sitting in her orderly arranged little parlor, her person as neat as everything around her, and her three children as sweet and pure as May blossoms. Two were playing on the floor, and the baby slept in the cradle, that was drawn so close to the mother that she could touch the rocker, if needed, with her foot. She was sewing on a shirt for her husband. Four ladies made up the committee—a formidable number. Mr. Newton was away attending the funeral of a poor laborer's child—so the coast was clear and the culprit in our power.

With an easy grace the minister's wife received us, and soon we were all well seated.

"We have come," said Miss Lane after sundry preliminary throat clearings and bridling motions of her head peculiar to herself, "to have a little conversation with you about our church affairs."

"Hadn't you better talk on that subject with my husband?" was answered with the utmost composure. "It is his particular province.

"No, ma'am," said Miss Lane, her voice gaining emphasis; "we have no fault to find with Mr. Newton. He does his part to our entire satisfaction."

"Oh! I understand." Mrs. Newton spoke as if a light were breaking into her mind.

"Yes, ma'am," Miss Lane went on, "it is your duty in the church that we have come to talk about, not your husband's; and I hope you will not take it ill of us if we speak out plainly."

"Not by any means," replied Mrs. Newton. I noticed a slight quiver in her voice, a slight flushing of her cheeks, and a brightening of her soft hazel eyes. But it was plain that she was self-possessed, and in no way intimidated by this unexpected citation to answer for delinquencies.

"Not by any means," she repeated. "Speak out plainly, and if in anything I have been derelict, I will willingly confess my fault, and do the best I can to lead a better life."

"Plain speaking is always best," said our mouthpiece, oracularly. "So we will speak plainly. The fact is, Mrs. Newton, you have failed almost entirely to meet the expectations or our people."

"Indeed! I am grieved to learn this." Mrs. Newton spoke seriously, but with no sign of disturbance. "I was not aware before that the people had any special claims on me. What do you expect of me?"

"We have already intimated our expectations in various ways. There is the girls' senior class in Sunday school; that, of course, we expected you to take. And you are wanted on the visiting committee and in our missionary society. Unless our minister's wife takes the lead in the temporalities of the church, nothing will prosper."

"Then," said Mrs. Newton, "it is understood that while my husband's duties relate mainly to the spiritualities of the church, mine have special regard for its temporalities."

"Certainly, ma'am! You have expressed the difference of relation exactly," said Miss Lane, led on by the peculiar way in which Mrs. Newton put the question to admit the existence of a very wide range of duties as required of that lady by the congregation of St. Charity."

"This is all new to me ladies," said the minister's wife. "I was not aware before that any one in the congregation regarded me as having failed in duty."

"Every one so regards you." Our spokeswoman was a person who used great plainness of speech."

"This should have been stated in the beginning," said Mrs. Newton. "How was I to know your views in the matter? I saw all of my husband's correspondence, but not a word was said about his wife or the parish requirement in her case. Now it appears that her range of duties is almost as wide as his. I ought to have known this before I came here, ladies; and I really think the complaint of failure of duty is against you instead of me. Let me ask, so as to reach a clear understanding of this matter, what salary you pay your minister's wife."

"Salary!" gasped Miss Lane, her under jaw falling and her eyes projecting at least a quarter of an inch beyond their ordinary position. "Salary," she repeated in a bewildered and half-confounded way.

"Yes," quietly replied Mrs. Newton. "The salary. You do not, of course, require the services of your minister's wife in the way you propose without compensation."

"Preposterous!" Miss Lane had recovered herself, and gained a little blind indignation with her partial self possession. "Did any one ever hear of a thing so absurd! In hiring your husband for our minister—"

"You did not hire me," interrupted Mrs. Newton, with calm dignity. "Bear that in mind if you please."

"Thank you for the remark, Mrs. Newton," said I, coming almost involuntarily to her aid. "It throws a flood of light on the whole subject. True as gospel! We did not hire you, and have no claim on a single hour of your time. All that the church of St. Charity has a right to ask of you is that you do your duty as a wife and mother."

Mrs. Newton turned to me with a grateful look, and grasping my hand said:

"Thank you in return!"

A little while she paused in silence, but no one spoke. In the deep silence I think some wholesome convictions of the truth were finding their way even in the mind of Miss Lane, who, somehow, reminded me of a wilted leaf, or a piece of stiffly starched muslin suddenly drenched with water.

"My husband's duties are clear," very evenly spoke Mrs. Newton—very kindly, yet firmly and lucidly. "My husband's duties are clear. He has come to you as a spiritual guide and instructor. His office is to point to Heaven and lead the way. It is a high and holy office. I honor him in it, and sustain him to the best of my ability. My duties are also clear. I am simply a wife and mother; and, God being my helper, I will faithfully discharge a wife and mother's sacred obligations. At present these duties take up all my time; and conscience will not permit me to neglect real duties for the performance of imaginary ones. In doing such duties I best serve the church. This is my religion, and I have learned it from the Bible."

She paused for a moment. No one replying to her remarks, she went on:

"It has been alleged that I am not pious enough for the people here. Perhaps not. But of one thing you may rest assured; I am no hypocrite. I never put on a pious exterior to hide the want of charity in my heart. As I am you will always see me."

Mrs. Newton paused again; but as none of her visitors showed any inclination to speak, she continued:

"My religion is somewhat peculiar, I believe. I do not keep it as a showy Sunday suit, but wear it every day. My essential worship consists in a daily discharge of my duty as a wife and mother; my formal worship, in the pious prostration of my body before my Heavenly Father at set times, either in my closet or in the public assembly. The Sabbath, to me, is a golden clasp that binds together the circle of weekly duties. It is a blessing and a consolation just in the degree that the worship of my six days has been essential worship."

"And are we to expect nothing of a minister's wife?" said Miss Lane, in a very subdued voice. She was evidently conscious of having made a great mistake in her estimate of Mrs. Newton's character.

"Nothing more than her duty as a woman. If she have qualities that will give her a leading social influence, and have time to spare from her home duties, which are always first, she ought to let these qualities become active for good. But no more can, with justice, be required of her than of any other woman in the congregation. Your contract for service is with her husband, not with her; and you have no more just claim upon her time, nor right to control her freedom than you have over the wife of your lawyer, doctor or schoolmaster. It is this mistaken idea of people in regard to minister's wives that is producing so much trouble in societies, and making wretched the lives of hundreds of poor women, who hardly dare say that their souls are their own. It is not enough that the minister's wife is expected to keep her house and clothe her children upon the lowest range of income, that will not allow her competent help, but she must spend half of her time gossiping around among the idle or well-to-do ladies in her congregation—take part in their sewing circles, and attend all their various meetings for good or doubtful purposes. Now all this is wrong; and if you are not satisfied with my husband, because I will not imitate so bad an exampe, you must give him notice accordingly; or if you think that my services are absolutely essential to the prosperity of the church, just state the amount of salary you can afford to give, and if, for the sum, I can procure a person in every way as competent as myself to take charge of my children and household, I will take into serious consideration your proposition. Beyond this, ladies, I can promise nothing more."

"I could wish," she continued, in a lower voice, "to number you all as my friends. I have come among you as a stranger, seeking no preëminence, but only desiring to do my duty as a woman. The fact that my husband is your minister gives me of right no position among you, and gives you no right to demand of me any public services. If my husband fails in his duty, admonish him; but in the name of justice and humanity, do not establish any supervision over me. Let my private life be as sacred from intrusion as that of any other woman. This I have a right to demand, I will be satisfied with nothing less."

Silenced, if not convinced, was Miss Phœbe Lane, and she retired in due time with her committee of remonstrance and accusation, their colors trailing on the ground. I lost no time in giving my history of the interview; repeating almost word for word the clear, strong language of Mrs. Newton, that she might have the full benefit of her own statement of the case. And I am happy to say that there was common sense enough and right feeling enough in the parish of St. Charity to do her justice. Her husband is still our minister, active, useful and beloved; but as no salary has yet been set apart for his wife, she has not assumed any duties in the congregation, and from present appearances, I think, has no intention of doing so. But as a wife and mother her life is beautiful; and her example of far more benefit to the people under her husband's care than all her more public acts could be, had she entered upon every duty that was so generously assigned to her.

SHE COULDN'T REMOVE HER HAT.

The other night in one of the theaters a lady with a tall hat that completely obstructed the view came to a seat in front of an elderly gentleman, who courteously leaned over and addressed her escort: "If your lady does not remove her hat so that I can see the stage, I shall have to leave the theater." The other courtly replied that she would not, whereupon the complainant rose and went to the box office and demanded and received his money back, the manager agreeing with him that he could not enjoy the performance under the circumstances. It happened that the next evening the trio met in society and became acquainted, when the lady confessed that she would have removed the obstruction from her head if she could have done so. "Could have done so?" queried the gentleman. "Yes," responded the lady. "You see these tight fitting jackets and waists prevent our raising our arms. In dressing we put on our hat before the jacket or waist, as we could never get them on without the assistance of a maid." The gentleman gallantly observed that he was sorry he had spoken. —Boston Advertiser.

My Kingdom.

She winds her arms tightly about my neck,
Her dear little arms with dimples kissed over,
And her baby breath touches my lips and my cheeks
As sweet as the scent of a summer-bloomed clover;
Then she kisses me over and over and over,
And each kiss is as sweet as a white-blossomed clover.

All night-capped my princess creeps into her bed,
And, though gone but a minute I know she is sleeping,
And I feast on the slumber smiles lighting her face,
While I sit by the window, my restful watch keeping;
Like a robin wing-weary my bird is a-sleeping,
And I sit in content, my restful watch keeping.

To-morrow may come, as to me they have come,
With frettings and cares the full hours to lessen,
And the earth will fast fetter my hands and my soul,
And the farthest star will seem nearer than Heaven;
Yet no touch of the earth can these watch hours lessen,
For I sit by the gate of my Kingdom of Heaven.

"IT VAS SACRED VISKEY."

The police seized some liquor from a Hebrew named Moses Beershank the other day, and he was arraigned in court charged with selling intoxicating beverages without a special tax, as required by law. Moses conducted his own case and asserted his innocence. "What explanation can you make in regard to the beer found in your place, Mr. Beershank?" said the judge. "I bought dot beer for my family's own brivate use, on a Friday, and of course der vas a lot left over for Saturday," retorted Moses.

"Well how about the whiskey?" Der viskey was a Grismas present," said Moses smilingly. "And the brandy?" Moses at this point assumed a serious aspect and gravely remarked, "Dot vas not brandy at all, your honor, it vas sacred viskey, used at the passover, made out of bodadoes in Jerusalem."—Boston Traveler.

"Why, judge," said the offender, "you are not in session!"

"This court," replied the judge, "is always in session, and consequently, always an object of contempt."

The amount of money that has been expended on levees by the states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri and Tennessee is said to reach $64,375,000. This seems a large sum, but the value of the property protected is far greater. FRIDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 25, 1887.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S veto of the dependent pension bill was wisely sustained by the House yesterday by a vote of 175 in favor of and 125 against its passage—less than the two-thirds vote necessary to pass it over the veto.

SPRINGFIELD'S new depot looks a little nearer now that the railroad commissioners have recommended the Boston & Albany road to build one. They favor the location on the east side of Main street, and, of course, a separation of grades.

FEBRUARY distinguished itself last Friday night by giving us a genuine thunder storm, the lightning being decidedly vivid, causing a $350,000 fire on Staten Island, and quite a little damage in other localities, while the accompanying gale did much damage along the coast.

IT'S a great pity the speaker of the House at Washington cannot do as may the speaker of the English House of Commons, and adjourn the House at his pleasure when in his opinion a debate becomes "tiresome or obstructive." There would be some short sessions if this were done.

A CHICAGO man is trying to convince the treasury officials that they ought to pay him $1000 for a government bond of that denomination which he claims to have chewed up and swallowed one night when he thought he heard burglars in the house. If their digestion is as good as his seems to be, they may swallow his story.

THE Boston Record hits the nail square on the head in the following paragraph. Read and ponder it well, brethren of the country press: —

There used to be a good deal of fun in looking over our country exchanges, but lately too many of them have taken to printing this prepared plate matter, and so we get the same dry stuff in them all and not half so much that is bright and interesting. Brethren, if you want to run a newspaper, run it and you will make more money by running a smaller paper all your own than buying this cheap ready made stuff to fill up with.

AN earthquake occurred in Italy about 6 o'clock Wednesday morning, its force being felt principally along the coast of the gulf of Genoa, where many villages were destroyed, with an appalling loss of life, the latest reports placing the number of killed at 2000. The region visited is full of popular winter resorts, and American and English tourists in great numbers are fleeing in every direction.

AMERICAN workingmen will find something of interest in the fact that Krupp, the great German steel manufacturer, who employs 10,000 men, pays out less money for wages every month than Andrew Carnegie, the Pittsburg manufacturer, who employs 6000 men. In other words the American workingman's wages are about 75 per cent higher than those of his fellow-worker across the water in the same line of business. And yet the workingman over this side is not always happy.

THE Vermont railroad commissioners make a full and interesting report on the White River disaster, which they attribute to a broken rail, their theory being that a piece of the rail flew up and broke the journal of the rear sleeper. No blame is attached to anybody for the accident, but the board commends the experiments in steam heating and electric lighting of cars, and will recommend steam heat for cars next winter if the roads do not find some other safe method of heating before that time.

THE decision of the Springfield Watch Company to remove their business to Canton, Ohio, is naturally received with a good deal of sorrow and dissatisfaction in the city which has fostered the enterprise from its infancy, and seen it grow from a weakling to its present strong and vigorous estate, giving employment to 500 skilled workmen. But Canton holds out liberal inducements to the company to make the change, and Springfield people do not care to begin hiring folks to stay with them when they want to go.

UNLESS President Cleveland interposes his veto, which he is hardly likely to do, the trade dollars will be redeemed, both branches of Congress having agreed upon a bill for their redemption in standard silver dollars or subsidiary coins, if presented before July 1. They will be recoined, but not as a part of the silver bullion required to be coined monthly into standard dollars, the House silver men refusing to make any concession of this kind. The amount which will thus be added to the silver circulation is variously estimated at from $7,000,000 to $20,000,000.

SHALL WE HAVE A SOLDIER'S MEMORIAL?

There is a prospect that the subject of a memorial hall and library building will interest the voters at the coming town meeting. The town now has $5000 in the bank for the soldiers' monument or memorial, and it is proposed that the town now appropriate $10,000 more, and build a memorial hall and library building, and $750 has already been subscribed by private citizens for the purchase of a building lot. In this connection it is said that A. H. Willis of Boston has offered to give a lot on Thorndike street, between his house and that of John Foster, if the building be erected this year. But whether or not this is the best location, remains to be decided. Several other places have been spoken of, among them the vacant lot on the corner of Central and Pleasant streets, which would doubtless be the most central of any that could be procured. Palmer is among the last to provide a memorial for her soldiers, and it is to be hoped the voters will favorably consider the matter, and that the building will be erected without further loss of time.

THE GRAND ARMY POST'S PROTEST.

At a meeting of L. L. Merrick Post, No. 107, G. A. R., Wednesday evening, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, There are at the present time some 15,000 survivors of the war against rebellion in the poor houses of the land and probably as many more dependent upon private charity for support, and

Whereas, By the death of surgeons, captains and comrades, in the more than twenty years since the close of the war, these men are now debarred from adducing absolute proof that their disabilities arose from army service.

Resolved, That Congress should promptly enact such laws as will at once place these veterans upon the pension rolls of the country.

Resolved, That the day has come when this great nation can afford, and ought to so liberalize the pension laws, that no man who has worn the Union blue shall be permitted to spend his remaining days in an alms house, to live a pauper's life, and go into a pauper's grave.

Resolved, That we cordially approve the measure proposed by the National Committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic, that pensions should be granted to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the late war, who are now, or may become disabled, and who are dependent upon their own labor for support, without requiring proof that such disability arose from their army service.

Resolved, That we condemn, as a gross injustice to the disabled veterans of the Republic, the veto by the president of the United States, of the pension bill recently passed by the two houses of Congress; a veto which affirms the scandalous continuance as public paupers, of thousands of broken and shattered survivors of the war against rebellion, whose fortune it was to so love their country as to offer life and lose health in its defense; a veto the more indefensible, because following closely upon approval of the Mexican pension bill, a measure having the same basal principle, only that the Mexican bill was far more liberal and with less limitations and restrictions, than the other, thereby making a most invidious and unjust discrimination against the soldier of 1861; a veto which declares that the alms house in life, and a pauper's grave at the end, is a fitting remembrance by the nation which these men helped to save.

Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., is to have a sociable and entertainment in their hall next Friday evening. All members of the post with their families, as well as all old soldiers who are not members, are cordially invited.

At a special meeting of Marcus Keep Post, G. A. R., held Monday evening, resolutions were adopted condemning the president's veto of the last pension bill, and a copy of them has been forwarded to Washington,

A Washington supper and entertainment was given at the M. E. church Wednesday evening. The supper consisted of baked beans, brown bread and other old time dishes, and the entertainment of music, recitations, etc.

Washington's birthday did not get much of an observance locally. The banks, schools and library were closed, but the mills and stores went right along piling up the shekels, with an utter disregard as to whether the father of his country was ever born or not.

Over 500 attended the dramatic entertainment at Central Hall Tuesday evening, given by the young people of the Universalist society. The play was well put on, and much appreciated by the audience. A social dance followed, some 60 couples participating. The net proceeds were about $100.

There is to be a union temperance rally at the M. E. church next Friday evening, at which time Prof. H. F. Cowell of Arms academy, Shelburne Falls, will deliver an address on "The Irresistible Conflict." Brief remarks from the local clergymen are also expected, and all are invited to be present.

Danforth & Thompson's orchestra has just reorganized and enlarged, and now consists of six pieces. John Claffey of the Pittsfield orchestra takes the first violin, and his brother Peter, of the same orchestra, who is a first-class piccolo player, has just moved to town and will play at the sociable and dance next Tuesday night. The orchestra at present is made up as follows: Fayette Thompson, cornet; A. H. Danforth, clarionet; John Claffey, 1st violin; Frank Hanley, 2d violin; Peter T. Claffey, piccolo; Nic. Cantwell, double bass. They are now prepared to furnish first-class concert and dance music at short notice.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, FEB. 23d, 1887.

On Thursday afternoon the report of the trustees of the agricultural college was presented to the House. A notable part is its warm eulogy of the late ex-President W. S. Clark, whose last days were passed under a cloud regarding his standing in the community. They are friendly and admiring words. The report also speaks highly of the trustees—William Knowlton and Marshall P. Wilder. The college is in an unusually prosperous condition, and three hundred letters of inquiry were received in July, August, September and October, of whom 90 are from poor boys who wanted to work their way along. Of the 80 free scholarships, 67 have sent applications, of whom 53 were examined and 41 accepted. The entire number of 80 would have been filled, had there been assurance that work could have been obtained to carry the students through. It is recommended that a labor fund be established for helping poor students. The property of the college, above its liabilities, is $264,536.

Two liquor bills were reported Thursday—one requires the proceeds of forfeited liquors to be paid to the state treasury, and the other puts heavy restrictions on the sale of liquors in tenements, while it is forbidden in dwellings.

An attempt to remedy an evil in congressional life was made on Friday by Mr. Edward Stanwood of Brookline, late editor-in-chief of the Boston Daily Advertiser, in a bill he presented to the committee on federal relations. He stated what is generally acknowledged, that the time of members at Washington is often foolishly wasted by being obliged to do errands for their constituents. He proposes, in his bill, to have the governor and council appoint an agent from each congressional district, to have as much salary as a congressman, whose duty should be to do this work for constituents and leave the members free to attend to legislation. It is a fact, he said, that Congress is now and becoming more so, an inefficient legislative body, compared with the British and German parliaments and the French chambers. The committee acknowledged the evil, but did not consider the relief practicable, and voted leave to withdraw.

On Friday three salary bills were reported by the public service committee—to raise the Norfolk probate judge from $2000 to $2500; the Berkshire sheriff from $1000 to $1600, and Middlesex treasurer from $1800 to $2500.

A report has come from the public health committee that it is inexpedient to legislate further against arsenic in wall papers.

Reconsideration of the Boston investigation order, which the House adopted by 117 to 94, is pending, and is a special assignment for March 2d.

Representative Milliken of Malden is determined to save something, if possible, out of the wreck of his pet scheme to prevent the public execution of criminals. He has made a motion to reconsider the rejection of his substitute bill, and that motion has been laid upon the table. By that means he will get time to canvass among the members and see if any of them will help him out. It would not be strange if a majority of the House was in favor of doing something to prevent the publication of long reports of executions, while they might not approve his bill.

Washington's birthday proves to have taken more than one day out of the working time of the Legislature. Less than a quorum of the House was present on Monday, and so no business could be properly transacted. They received some petitions and committee reports, and then adjourned to Wednesday afternoon. The Senate did a day's work, but, as there was nothing debatable in its calendar only 15 minutes were required for doing it. In May and June the Legislature will be wishing that it had some of the cool weather that it is now wasting in February.

On Washington's birthday came Gov. Ames's reception to the public. Ours is a Democratic government, and we must all reverence the people and the people must have a chance to see the hired men they have at work for them. Now, this reception was not of Mr. Ames's engineering, any more than the first of the kind three years ago was Gov. Robinson's. In a certain sense it was forced upon each of them, and by the same men too, who worked it up so that they could not well decline. Robinson had more of a crowd than Ames, but his was the first of the kind and Ames had a storm against him. This year 1262 persons shook hands with the governor in the executive chamber between eleven and one o'clock. Of course a good many prominent people were there—ministers, soldiers, lawyers, judges, doctors, merchants and so on, men and women, boys and girls. But most of the crowd went by the governor as if they were on a walking match. They hardly looked him in the face, but were in and out in a hurry. A host of ragged and dirty little boys, just as they had left their play in the gutters to come in, were among the crowd. I do not believe that governor's receptions on the birthday will ever become an institution. This year was just like three years ago, and it cannot be any particular pleasure to the governor or the public.

Wednesday saw some important bills reported to the Legislature. In the Senate was the measure to exempt the Fitchburg railroad from giving a mortgage on its property to secure the bonds issued to the state to pay for the Hoosac tunnel, and to allow the state to have three directors on the board, to be reduced to two if the state's stock should fall below 20,000 shares, and to one, should it fall below 10,000.

In the House was presented a municipal woman suffrage bill—Senator Slattery of Middlesex and Representative Lynch of Boston dissenting. It gives women the same right to hold office and vote in town affairs as men, but does not allow them to vote for state or county officers, representatives in congress, nor for president. Methods of being assessed and registered are provided, and present laws are repealed.

A measure certain to make a lively contest—judging by the record of a few years ago, before it met ex-Gov. Long's veto—is the bill to require all dentists in the state to register and have a certificate from a state board of registration, in dentistry, under penalty of from $50 to $100 fine or three months' imprisonment for every offense. All persons who have not been in practice in the state three years, or are not graduates of a reputable medical or dental college, must be examined by the board. The examination bill is $10. The fee for a certificate is 50 cents. The board is to consist of five skilled dentists, either men or women.

A bill was reported to the House today by the committee on parishes and religious societies to incorporate Albert W. Weeks, Charles B. Fisk, Lyman Dimock, E. G. Buss, Frank L. Brooks, S. Edgerton, Freeman Smith and George H. Justin, as the Second Baptist Church of Palmer. Section 1 gives them the powers and privileges of similar organizations. Sec. 2 fixes the name, Sec. 3 allows them to hold $25,000 in real estate, and Sec. 4 makes the act take effect upon its passage.

LANDON.

LETTER FROM SPRINGFIELD.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 24th, 1887.

The new jail, which with lot and appurtenances cost the county of Hampden about $250,000, and which cost the late Sheriff Sanderson his political head, is partially finished, and is occupied by one hundred and fifty of the county's winter boarders, thirteen of whom are women. It is an excellent building and experts say is worth all it cost. To compare it with the old jail would be like comparing a German flute to a jewsharp. The questions whether the county needed the new institution, or whether the old structure might not have been improved to answer present wants, are now undebatable. We have got the new jail with, as Attorney General Stevens would say, "its concomitant blessings;" which means fitted up with all the modern improvements, and a Democratic sheriff to act as stage manager for the coming three years. The latter, by the way, is in disrepute among his Jacksonian followers, on account of his independent action in making appointments. The party's committee on offices, which holds sessions at Boss O'Keefe's livery stable, were not properly consulted, and therefore they announce, with adjectives and emphasis, that Brother Simon is a three-years-old; that the place that knows him now will know him no more after 1889. They forget that vinegar is not equal to sugar as bird bait, and that attempts to control officials sometimes change party affiliations; for example, see the late high sheriff. It will be remembered that he was a Democrat of the first water when elected sheriff, but could not stand the party pressure, and sought refuge among the enemies of his political first love.

The three sudden deaths among our prominent young business men in the past few weeks, is something unusual; and especially so, as they lived within a few rods of each other. The first to die, William Merrick, was not as well known as the others, but his loss is shown to be a great one in the circle in which he moved. His noble character, as illustrated by his will, in which he bestowed nearly $200,000 in worthy charitable objects, is vividly portrayed, and his acts will have a tendency to influence others who wish to live in fragrant memory after they pass away, to like benevolences. The men who accumulate wealth and then by disposal show only seifishness of nature, are not the ones monuments are erected to, unless they leave the means to erect them with; and then they are soon forgotten. The loss of the others, who have so suddenly died, Mr. Wesson, who was killed by the Vermont railroad accident, and Mr. Crocker, the successful paper maker, is felt by large circles of friends, and ought to make us all thoughtful and better.

The absorbing theme of late, locally, is the prospective new depot. The readers of the JOURNAL have been informed from time to time, that such a thing as a new railroad station was in contemplation at the county seat. It must be something like twenty years since the subject was first broached, but we are evidently nearer, in point of time, than when we begun to discuss the question, though it may not now be visible to the naked eye. A large amount of ink has been used in discussing plans and location, but I infer that all this will not amount to much with the railroad people; when ready to build a new depot they will follow their own plans and locate where they please, having reference undoubtedly to the convenience of the public, as well as themselves, giving the latter the preference. I see no reason why the company should not do this; it has its own bills to pay, and if it wants land of the public to carry out its arrangements, it generally has to pay two or three times as much as individuals would. I hardly think, after all, that corporations are more selfish than the common run of humanity. SUNNY COOK.

The avenues leading to an early grave have often been stopped by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. 25 cts.

Wm. Delphy, Academy Hotel, Baltimore, Md., writes: "Salvation Oil not only relieves rheumatism but effects an entire cure." Price 25 cents.

A GOOD RECORD.

About twenty-six years ago I owned a nice horse that was fast and a family pet, but as he advanced in years commenced to stumble, and fell a number of times. My wife was afraid and would not ride after him. G. W. Burdick was at that time in my employ at the quarry, but I did not know he was a horse-shoer. I had told him about old "Mack's" failings, so unknown to me he shod him, and he never stumbled or fell while he lived, six or seven years. Mr. Burdick has shod all my horses ever since, without a single exception, giving perfect satisfaction, and I can recommend him to be one of the best shoers to my knowledge.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Having a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me that I would have to have the bone scraped or leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well."

WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cents, large bottles. 46-eow-1y

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT, holden at Springfield, within and for the County of Hampden.

Humbly shews Addie Betters of Springfield, in said County of Hampden, that she was lawfully married to Oliver Betters, then of Mooers, Clinton County, and State of New York, and now of parts unknown, at said Mooers, on the eighth day of November, A. D. 1851, that they have since lived together as husband and wife in said Mooers, until on or about October 15th, A. D. 1864, and she has ever conducted toward him as a faithful, chaste and affectionate wife, yet said Oliver Betters, regardless of his marriage vows and obligations at said Mooers, on or about October fifteenth, A. Wherefore she prays that the bonds of matrimony heretofore existing between her and the said Oliver Betters may be dissolved, and for such further orders and decrees in the premises as to law and justice may appertain.

A City Lyric.

I hear the jocund note, thy native song;
It broods beneath my casement in the night,
And cooing, wakes me in the early light,
While I would still sleep on and on and on,
And wonder if thou never will be gone.
I hear thy warbling down the echoing street,
Where other songs arise thy song to greet
And in it's chorus blend,
Down the long trail's ash-barrel-cucumbered waste
Thy plaintive chant I hear; thou hast, thou sayest,
"Washtubs to mend!"

O'i, child of song, my heart goes out to thee!
Although I would not, I must hear thee sing,
Alike in winter seer and budding spring;
Far from the maddening wail though I should flee,
Yet biding thy time thou still wouldst be
Singing the same old tune, the same old words,
Like the repeating minstrels of the birds;
Pray thee suspend 'em!
In efforts vain thy voice no longer spend;
If it be true that you have tubs to mend,
Why don't you mend 'em?

—R. J. Burdette.

QUEER POINTS OF ETIQUETTE.

In Sweden if you address the poorest person in the street you must lift your hat. A gentleman passing a lady on the stairs of a hotel must do the same. To enter a shop or bank with one's hat on is a terrible breach of good manners. When a train leaves a platform or a steamboat a pier, all the lookers-on lift their hats to the departing passengers and bow to them, a compliment returned by the travelers. In aristocratic circles in Persia, a visitor sends notice an hour or two before calling. If the visit is one of importance notice is sent the previous day. As the visitor approaches the house the servants, mounted or on foot, come forth to meet him, and one returns with speed to announce his coming. According to his relative rank, the host meets him at the foot of the staircase, at the door or at the upper part of the room. The question of seats is also one requiring the utmost circumspection in observing the various shades of rank. If the visitor's rank is superior to that of the host, the former is invited to occupy a sofa alone, at the upper corner, while the host sits on a chair or on the floor at the right. The left is more honorable than the right in Persia. In America, a lady with another will often lay her hand upon her friend's arm; this is considered a very great and objectionable familiarity by an Italian. "Never touch the person, it is sacred," is an Italian proverb. They have some very foolish customs in Holland, such as that, for instance, which compels a lady, whether alone or accompanied by other ladies, to avoid passing a club house or other place of rendezvous for gentlemen. If a lady must needs enter a confectionery store, library or other place where men naturally go, and finds a gentleman or two there, she feels compelled to retire as precipitately as if she had seen a case of small-pox. The men know this, but unless they have finished their business they will not retire. The lady retreats in the most undignified manner, and the human bear finishes his book or his chocolate, even though the lady is at the door waiting for him to leave.

A CURIOUS CHURCH.

St. Ann's Episcopal church in New York is specially designed for deaf mutes. Its rector, Rev. Dr. Gallaudet, is the son of a deaf mute lady and the husband of another, though he has himself the full possession of hearing and speech. He has a lifelong interest in deaf mutes, by which he comes naturally, as his father was the founder of the first school for deaf mutes in this country. Both he and his father married pupils in the schools where they were instructors. Dr. Gallaudet has been instrumental in establishing the Church Mission to Deaf Mutes, whose operations are confined to the dioceses of New York, Long Island, Albany and Newark and the diocese of New England. In this district sign services are held in twenty-five different places by nine Episcopal clergymen, of whom four are deaf mutes. The New York Tribune says:

"The casual visitor who drops into St. Ann's on Eighteenth street, some Sunday, to see the strange sign service, does not have the faintest idea of the almost infinite love, patience and self-devotion which are required to bring deaf mutes in touch with the world around them. That Dr. Gallaudet possesses these qualities in a very high degree is evidenced by the great success which has attended his labors in this field. Certainly it is given to few clergymen to see to such tangible form the results of their life work."

COMFORT IN SWEARING.

A country parson, in encountering a storm the past season in the voyage across the Atlantic, was reminded of the following:

A clergyman was so unfortunate as to be caught in a severe storm in the voyage out. The water was exceedingly rough, and the ship persistently buried her nose in the sea. The rolling was constant, and at last the good man got thoroughly frightened. He believed they were destined for a watery grave. He asked the captain if he could not have prayers. The captain took him by the arm and led him down to the forecastle, where the tars were singing and swearing. "There," said he, "when you hear them swearing you may know there is no danger."

He went back feeling better; but the storm increased his alarm. Disconsolate and unassisted he managed to stagger to the forecastle again. The mariners were swearing as ever. "Mary," he said, as he crawled into his berth, to his sympathetic wife, after tacking across a wet deck—"Mary," thank God they're swearing yet."

MOTHERS,

do you not see the pallid face, once so bright, growing thinner? Do you not hear the hacking cough, and note the wasted, languid indifference, where once was mirth, brightness, and keen enjoyment for all the pleasures of life? Do not be mistaken or deceived. That child is dying of consumption—slowly, but surely. Yet thousands are living today who have been cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which surpasses all other medicines for the cure of that disease. Send ten cents for pamphlet and testimonials. Address, World Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

A severe cold, ending in a hard, dry cough, caused me to pass many sleepless nights, coughing until it seemed as though my head would burst. I told my friends that I must die. I was advised to try Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer. First dose was a great surprise; slept all night in peace. It cured me right up. Persuaded my friends to try it and it has cured every case.—Marshal H. Moody, South Hadley, Mass. For sale by all druggists. Price 25c., 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

DINNER FOR ONE.

As the train came to a stop, I was filled with enthusiasm and a desire for a square meal. There was a low shed near the depot over which appeared the legend, "Meals at all hours." Hither the passengers hurried. There was a buxom damsel on the door-step of this wayside Delmonico's, with her mouth wide open, her auburn curls flying in the breeze, and her good right arm beating a large and very noisy gong. One could hear that gong for a full mile. When this fair female of Junoesque statue confronted me, I stopped and gazed modestly at my feet. There was nothing attractive nor suggestive about my feet, but still I gazed upon them, as if in meditation. It is a way I have. As I stood thus, she ejaculated:

"Superfish!"
"Hey!" said I.
"Bing" went her gong.
"Stakerliver!" said she.
"What!" said I.
"Bang" went her gong.
"Pierorpud!" said she.
"Where?" said I.
"Bung!" went her gong.
"Tearcough!" said she.
"When? said I.
"Sling!" went her gong.
"Chees'n-crackers!" said she.
"Who!" said I.
"Slang!" went her gong.
"Nutserapples!" said she.
"Eh!" said I.
"Slung!" went her gong.
"Fifty cents," said she.
"What?" said I.
"Toot!" said the train.
"My!" said I.
"All out," said she.
"Why?" said I.
"All-a-board!" said he.
"Yes!" said I.
"Treat!" said she.
"Cert!" said I.
"Ph-wis!" said the train.
"Skip," said she.
"Goin'!" said I.
"Too late," said she.
"P'raps," said I.
"Left," said she.
"Damn," said I.—Goodall's Sun.

LINCOLN AS POSTMASTER.

In the spring of this year, 1833, he was appointed Postmaster of New Salem, and held the office for three years. Its emoluments were slender and its duties light, but there was in all probablity no citizen of the village who could have made so much of it as he. The mails were so scanty that he was said to carry them in his hat, and he is also reported to have read every newspaper that arrived; it is altogether likely that this formed the leading inducement to his taking the office. His incumbancy lasted until New Salem ceased to be populous enough for a post-station and the mail went by to Petersburg. Dr. Holland relates a sequel to this official experience which illustrates the quaint honesty of the man. Several years later, when he was a practicing lawyer, an agent of the Post office Department called on him. and asked for a balance due from the New Salem office, some seventeen dollars. Lincoln arose, and opening a little trunk which lay in a corner of the room, took from it a cotton rag in which was tied up the exact sum required. "I never use any other man's money but my own," he quietly remarked. When we consider the pinching poverty in which these years had been passed, we may appreciate the self-denial which had kept him from making even a temporary use of this little sum of government money.—Nicolay and Hay: December Century.

The New York Sun recently gave a description of the paintings in some of the leading bar-rooms of New York City, showing some of them to contain $60,000 to $100,000 each in paintings, statuary, etc., to make the path to perdition attractive and fascinating. These saloons are the product and legitimate outgrowth of the license "restricts" is utterly false and fallacious. The young men who frequent these gilded pathways to hell are first assured that these places are licensed, legalized and protected by the strong right arm of the law, and hence are legitimate and necessary to the public good and welfare. One of these gilded saloons will do more to lure souls down to eternal ruin than a hundred "low dives," that only take the cast off victims when so robbed of their money and debauched of character as not to be fit to associate with the new "customers" which these more "respectable" saloons are constantly receiving. The Gilded saloon "must go" in order that the young men may be saved. God and truth and the right are stronger than all wealth of the world combined.—National Tem. Ad.

Had Experience. "You say that you have only been in this country three months," said a lady to an applicant to become mistress of the kitchen." "I'm afraid you have not had experience. Were you in service before you came to this country?" "Dade an' I wasn't mim! Me feyther was wilthy, an' owned a cow an' two pigs, but its experience I've had since I've been here. In the three months I've been in twinty-sax places."—Life.

It was at a late "military reunion" that one of the banquetters accosted the president of the occasion when cigars and been reached, and said sorrowfully:

"Shay, major, thish ain't like good ol' fashion military dinnash, eh! 'Member when I sat down in the salad bowl? We had dinnash then."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

My Own Girl.

Only ten dollars—no more sir—
The wages I weekly touch,
For labor, steady and sore, sir,
It isn't a deal too much;
Your money has wings in the city,
And vanishes left and right,
But I hand it all to Kitty
As sure as Saturday night.
Bless her, my own, my wee,
She's better than gold to me!

We live in a reeking court, sir,
With roguery, drink and woe,
But Kitty has never a thought, sir,
That isn't as white as snow—
She hasn't a thought or feeling
An angel would blush to meet;
I love to think of her kneeling
And praying for me so sweet.
Bless her, my own, my wee,
She's better than gold to me!

I must be honest and simple,
I must be manly and true,
Or how could I pinch her dimple,
Or gaze in her frank eyes blue?
I feel, not anger, but pity,
When workmates go to the bad;
I say, "They've never a Kitty—
They'd all keep square if they had."
Bless her, my own, my wee,
She's better than gold to me!

Ah, the day we stood at the altar,
Modest, and white and still,
And forth from her lips did falter,
The beautiful, low, "I will."
Our home has been bright and pretty
As ever a poor man's may,
And my soft little dove, my Kitty,
Shall nest in my heart for aye.
Bless her, my own, my wee,
She's better than gold to me!
—Frederick Langbridge.

A STRANGE WOOING.

The weather had been very cold, even for January. For days nobody had stirred out, unless compelled by necessity, and I've no doubt our dear mother had longed many times for a change which would allow her noisy children to exercise their lungs and muscles out of doors.

At last the change came. During the forenoon the thermometer indicated a rising temperature, and about mid-day "the old woman up in the sky began emptying her feather beds."

Thick and fast the downy snowflakes fell, wrapping every tree and shrub in a garment of pure white, and making even the "stake and rider" fences, the log barns and corn cribs, things of beauty which were too truly, "joys not to last forever."

Hastily we children were clad in coats, cloaks, scarfs, mittens and all the paraphernalia of outer garments which loving mothers provide and insist on being worn, despite the protest of the wearers.

At last we were free and out upon the hill near by, where there was grand sport, sliding, snow-balling, and making snow men.

The afternoon slipped quickly by, the snow ceased falling, and the evening was settling down clear and cold, when upon the opposite hilltop there came in sight a farmer's box-sleigh, drawn by a span of bay horses. Very hastily we drove our sleds to the foot of our hill, and we reached it just in time for a hitch.

The driver of the establishment was not visible.

The hand which guided the team seemed not a hand, but a huge wad of buckskin and yarn, and it proceeded from a sort of tower of bed quilts, blankets, buffalo robes, comforters, surmounted by a head-piece enveloped in a green and red "Bay State" shawl. There was a little crack that was undoubtedly left for the eyes, but no eyes could be seen by us.

Edging around a very little, but probably as much as circumstances would allow, the roll of dry goods and furs inquired if "Yon house was 'Squire Black's?"

We replied affirmatively, and settled down to the enjoyment of a ride to our own door, during which we exchanged many whispered speculations as to who the stranger might be.

When the sled stopped, a committee of us reported the arrival at the house, while the remainder watched the tying and blanketing of the horses, and then formed a voluntary escort.

"'Squire Black, I suppose?"

Yes, sir; come in. Getting quite cold outside," said my father, eying his guest curiously.

"Well, yes, we have had a fearful spell 'o weather, and I've been on the road for the last two days of it. I see you don't know me, 'Squire, and I swan, my eyes were so full 'o frost that I hardly knew you; but I reckon you'll see who I am when I get this toggery off."

From the moment our visitor had stepped inside, he had been engaged in unwrapping one garment after another, a process for all the world like peeling an onion.

At last there stood a young man of four-and-twenty years, a six-footer, with broad shoulders, face bronzed by exposure to the weather, but a goodly face to look upon, with its rather square jaw, ruddy cheeks, full, smiling lips, brown hair curling over a broad forehead, and blue eyes, which answered my father's questioning look by a very merry twinkle.

In a moment father extended both of his hands, and grasped the stranger's most cordially.

"You are one of Aunt Ann's boys."

A hearty laugh preceded the reply.

"I wasn't afeered but you'd git it right, 'Squire, if I give you time enough. I'm the same little Joe Tolon you taught long division to."

We knew Aunt Anna was a former landlady of father's when he was a pedagogue; that she lived forty or fifty miles from us—a great distance in those days—and our interest began to flag after mother came from the kitchen, and the conversation was continued about old neighbors, of whose existence we had been ignorant. We betook ourselves to the kitchen, where mother soon followed.

Presently, while Joe was caring for his team, father came in, and, all unmindful of the old adage about "little pitchers," said, with an air of one who must be very circumspect lest his risibilities would betray him:

"Ma, what do you suppose Joe has come for?"

"I am sure I don't know," replied mother, composedly, stirring annother handful of meal into the boiling mush which was to be the piece de resistance of our evening meal.

"He has come for a wife."

"A wife? I didn't know he was acquainted around here."

"He isn't. He wants me to recommend him to some girl who is strong, able and willing to work, knows how to run a house, and"—hesitating a little as he saw the very contemptuous curve of my mother's nose and mouth — "and I've — spoken about Jane."

"'Squire Black!" exclaimed mother, emphazing her words still further by a dash of the pudding stick which sent the mush flying over the stove.

Jane was a farmer's daughter who worked for us summers, and went home winters to help do up the spinning, weaving, and the like.

A mutually satisfactory arrangement, as Jane's services were needed more at home in the winter than in the summer, and mother thereby saved the board and wages of a girl during the winter, when the work was not so heavy. Mother often said that Jane put the work ahead so when she was there, that she couldn't keep her busy the year round.

Ah, help was help in those days! But to return to the kitchen. Father had changed his position, getting a little out of the way of another charge from the mush pot, where the beating was going on vigorously.

After a pause he began again:

"Well, ma, Jane is not bound to marry Joe unless she wants to. But perhaps she will never get another chance as good. You know yourself that any one of Aunt Anna's boys is bound to make a good man and a smart one."

"None too smart if he thinks to get a wife in this way," snapped out mother.

"Let him try, ma, if he wants to; let him try. It won't hurt him to have the conceit taken out of him."

No reply, but mush was stirred as never mush was before.

"You know, ma, Jane has been keeping company with that trifling Dan Marcy.

"Why doesn't he marry a girl who knows him, if he wants to get married," inquired my mother; but the pudding-stick relaxed its vigor somewhat, and father ventured a little nearer the speaker.

"He says the girls up there are all squaws, and down by his mother's they have too high notions."

"Well, it's a heathenish, Frenchified way of courting a wife," replied mother, "and if he was to come about me that way, if I were Jane, I'd empty a bucket of water on him."

"Maybe she will, maybe she will," chuckled my father, who probably would have enjoyed that termination of the affair as well as any one.

"But, ma, you know Jane is terrible homely, and—"

What further he would have said was cut short by the entrance of Joe, bearing a jar and package.

"Mother sends these to you with her compliments, Mrs. Black."

Mother, who knew the flavor of Aunt Ann's cheese and honey of old, was somewhat mollified by these presents, but she remained rather sulky all the evening; even when Joe filled her wood-box, piling the sticks as evenly as laths in a bundle, filled the water pails, cut the kindling, and did the milking, bringing the pan in as clean, she condescended to tell him, as she would herself, or"—but did not say—"or Jane."

She would not be a party to that iniquity.

He nearly won her. She told father "he was a likely young man, but—" her lips shut close, and she shook her head when she thought of his mission.

But before morning the sky cleared, and things were hurried around for an early start to Jane's.

During the ride it was arranged that father was to introduce Joe's errand to the elders, and if they were willing, Joe might thereafter proceed as he liked.

So, upon reaching the farm, father and Mr. Holton left Joe and the boys to put up the team, and they came up to the house and held a conference with Mrs. Holton, while Jane was building a fire in the "best room."

The "best room" of an old-fashioned farm house was dreary enough. This one had a bright yarn carpet, several splint-bottomed and wooden chairs with patch-work cushions, a low-back rocking chair, a wooden "settee," a table with the Bible and almanac. A few silhouettes and prints from magazines were on the walls; but, after all, its only ornaments were the scrupulous cleanliness and its big fireplace.

Jane bustled in and out, on household and hospitable cares intent, being given by general consent some opportunity for an acquaintance and a chance to see and be seen before being told our errand.

You know already what she saw. What did Joe see?

Jane was, as father said, undeniably homely.

She was tall and angular. Her feet and hands were large. Her hair was a trifle too red for auburn and not yellow enough for gold. "Carroty" is the proper description.

Her light complexion was freckled, but her cheeks would shame the roses. Her eyes were gray; her nose had grown very long and then, as if wishing to make amends for that mishap, had shaped itself into a decided pug. Her mouth was large and always smiling, and smiling showed what was Jane's only beauty—a set of as regular and white teeth as ever came from a dentist's hand.

Her dress was of blue flannel, every thread spun and woven dy herself.

The hour or two before dinner was spent in viewing and discussing the stock, in telling the scanty news and talking over "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which was then appearing as a serial, in all of which Joe took his part sensibly and nobly.

At noon we were summoned to an excellent and bountiful farm dinner. It was quite evident by this time that Jane had been informed of our errand, for from perfect unconsciousness, she became suddenly preoccupied, nervous and blushing. Joe enjoyed his dinner and did ample justice to it.

After we were all done, suddenly there came a break and an awkward pause in the conversation. Joe cleared his throat, but without other signs of embarrassment began:

"Miss Holton, I see somebody has already told you what I have come for, and it's right that I should tell you something about myself. The squire here will tell you about my folks."

"I am twenty-five years old, and have never been sick in my life; I don't drink whisky, or chew tobacco. I am a member of the Baptist church when I am where there is one.

"I've been raised to work and can hold up my end with any man. I have a hundred and sixty acres of land about half cleared, there's the papers to show for it, and 'Squire Black will tell you they are all right.

"I've a good log-house, log-stable and so on. I own the horses I drove down here and a yoke of oxen besides. I don't owe any man a cent. I shall have cows and chickens when I've a wife to take care of 'em. Now if you think you can make up your mind to marry me, I'd like to ask you a few questions."

Jane said nothing, and Joe evidently taking silence for consent, proceeded:

"Did you cook this dinner?"

Still Jane was silent, but her mother answered "yes" for her.

Joe smiled. "Well the 'squire told me you were a good cook, or I wouldn't have come out here."

"Can you make good bread?"

A faint but rather indignant "yes" was heard from Jane, as if he had asked if she could wash her face or comb her hair.

"Can you milk and tend to milk, butter and cheese?"

"Yes," a little louder.

"Can you run a house and do all kinds of housework?"

The cat seemed to have gotten Jane's tongue again, and my mother, pitying her embarrassment, replied with an exhaustive catalogue of Jane's virtues as a housewife. Then suddenly checking herself as one who had said too much or said it in a wrong cause, became silent, but the questioning went on.

"Can you sew, knit, spin, weave, and are you strong and healthy?"

"Yes."

"As you have got to saying 'yes,' I'd like to go right on and ask you to have me; but I'll go out and feed my horses, and you can talk with your folks and the 'squire and his wife, and give me the answer to the question when I come in.

"I want to say first that if you agree to marry me I'll try and do the fair thing by you and expect you to do the same by me.

"You can always have what you can make from the butter and eggs, and half the wool for your own. It will be very lonesome, for they won't be another white woman nearer than five miles for a while yet, and the work will be hard, but may he no harder than you're used to. If you go, we'll have to start day after to-morrow. The roads are very rough, and it will take two—may be three days to travel the sixty-odd miles."

It took Joe a long time to feed his team, and during his absence a good deal of talking was done. When he returned, Mr. Holton stood by the table, looking very sober, and there were tears in the eyes of all the women when he said:

"Joe, Jane has concluded she'll chance it with you. See's been a good girl always, and we hope you'll use her well."

"I will, Mr. Holton," solemnly answered Joe, and he walked over to where Jane stood, and put his arms around her and kissed her.

Then they was a general handshaking, and arrangements were made for the wedding the next afternoon.

The wedding was an old-fashioned country one, and not long after the ceremony Joe's sleigh was packed with a cargo of feather beads, quilts, blankets and housekeeping goods of various kinds, and a nice cow (the pick of the herd) tied behind, for Mr. Holton would not let his daughter go empty-handed.

Every second year after that for many years Jane came home for a visit. The intervening years she could not come because "the baby was too little to bring," and the numerous little Tolons grew up in a regular succession, their heads mounting one above the other like the rounds of a ladder.

Father regularly asked Jane, when she made these visits, if she had come for her divorce.

Jane always replied: "Not this time. I don't see but what Joe and I get along as well as those who take more time for their courting.

And Joe, who was holding the baby while Jane "undid" the bigger ones, at the time this question was asked, would say approvingly: "That's so, Jane."

* * * * * * *

"Dear me," said Jane, as, leaning on Dr. Joe Tolon's arm, she threw back her widow's veil (she had worn that nearly ten years now) and wiped her glasses before "The Heart of the Wilderness" in the art gallery last fall—"Dear me, Joe, that looks just like the piece of woods opposite the door of the old house, when your father brought me home. I've seen the deer browsing there many a time. I didn't think that it would ever be a city, but your father said it would, and now the cars run over that very spot. It has been a long, long time, Joe, but the last ten years have been longer than all the rest.

AFLOAT IN A CRATER.

Captain C. E. Dutton of the U. S. Geological Survey has been recently engaged in making a study of Crater Lake, in Oregon, and the latest advices received from him show that he has discovered probably the deepest body of fresh water in the country. Leaving Ashland, Oregon, on the 7th of July, his party, escorted by ten soldiers, provided through the courtesy of the general commanding the military department of the Columbia, reached the brink of the wall of the lake on the 13th, having brought with them boats so mounted on the running gear of wagons as to bear transportation over a hundred miles of mountain road without injury. The boats bore the transportation without strain or damage, and preparations were at once begun for lowering 900 feet to the water. The steepness of the wall was very great, being at the place selected about 41 or 42 degrees, and the descent partly over talus, above covered with snow, and rocky, broken ledges lower down. The boats entered the water quite unharmed. The process of sheathing them, rigging the tackle, and lowering them occupied four days. A couple of days were occupied in making journeys around the walls of the lake by boat—the only possible way—and in examining the rocks and structures of the wall in its various parts. Next followed a series of soundings. The depth of the lake considerably exceeded the captain's anticipations, though the absence of anything like a talus near the water line already indicated deep water around the entire shore. The depths range from 853 to 1996 feet, so far as the soundings show, and it is quite possible and probable that depths both greater and shallower may be found. The average depth is about 1490 feet. The descent from the water's edge is precipitous; at 400 or 500 yards from shore, depths of 1500 to 1800 feet are found all around the margin. The greatest depth will probably exceed 2000 feet, for it is not probable that the lowest point has been touched. The soundings already made indicate it as being the deepest body of fresh water in the country.—Science.

SLEEPING FACE DOWNWARD.

Hunters, scouts, children and wild men sleer with the spine upward. So do animals, all but civilized man. If a dog, a cat or a horse were forced to lie upon its back it would die. Among the Arabian jugglers and show people that have been brought to this country it has been noticed that they always turn over upon their breasts when they go to sleep and lie that way till they wake. It seems to be the natural way. It protects the vital organs in case of a shot from an enemy.

The spine and the great amount of nerve tissue that starts from it are the most sensitive parts of the body. Lying with the great weight of the stomach, heart, intestines and other organs pressed upon these nerves it seems must in time work injury. Even the half weight, as when a person lies upon his side, must have its bad effects it is said. The spine and nerves are also abnormally heated by the common way of resting. Keep the spine and spinal nerves cool, say the advocates of the cow's and the wild man's way of sleeping. There are such advocates, among them able physicians. They affirm that turning upon the breast to sleep will relieve backache. Also it will leave the nerve stimulant free to flow vigorously from its centres and in that way will remedy indigestion and take away the bad taste in the mouth.

Many will be surprised to find how difficult it is to lie with the face downward after years of reposing in the other attitude. One cannot do so comfortably ten minutes at first. But practice will overcome the difficulty. The natural method, so called, of sleeping, has many and able advocates, recently.

RISE AND FALL OF THE BUSTLE.

The popularity of the bustle as an article of female adornment is hard to account for. Some ten years ago it reached a high state of development, and was then discarded for a time, but latterly it has come again in vogue, and this fall has probably touched high-water mark both in size and popularity. It is strange taste that stimulates the physical development that the bustle indicates, and it would, no doubt, be impossible to trace its origin; and probably not one in ten thousand who wear it care to know so long as it is the fashion. In looking at a well bustled woman, one is lead to believe that the intention of this addition to her figure was to imitate the graceful outlines of the quail or a modified form of the peacock. It looks handsome enough when the annex is skillfully constructed and gracefully worn, but the uninitiated cannot but sympathize with the wearer in the great responsibility which she assumes, and in the constant fear that something may go wrong with this elaborately built-up portion of her anatomy. She gets and wears what fashion dictates and takes all risks. There is a movement on foot, however, which may cause the downfall of the bustle. In Europe capitals fashionable dogs are beginning to be adorned with them as far as the exigences of the canine anatomy will permit. The fashion, of course will spread, and it is likely that when it begins to become general women will resume their natural shape and leave the bustle entirely to the dogs.

A fat woman entered a crowded street car, and, seizing a strap, stood on a gentleman's toes.

As soon as he could extricate himself, he arose and offered her his seat.

"You are very kind, sir," she said.

"Not at all, madam," he replied, "it's not kindness, it's self defense."—New York Sun.

A Day and a Life.

All day the rain had fallen; dense and dun,
The cloudy chariots of the storm had rolled
Athwart the pathway of the baffled sun
Till near his setting: then his spear of gold
Shivered the stormy darkness—and, behold,
At evening time 'twas light. I knew a life
Like this—all gloom and darkness, storm and strife,
Till near its end, when every shadow fled,
Leaving its setting gloriously bright—
And we who loved her, looked upon our dead,
Glad with a reverent joy—remembering how,
As death's cold dampness gathered on her brow,
And heaven's own radiance blessed her inner sight,
She raised her dying eyes and, smiling, said:
"Behold, at evening time it shall be light!"

IN A BARBER'S CHAIR.

The barbers were all busy during the hottest of hot days last week in an up-town shop when a visitor entered. His cheek-bones were high, his moustache was of the color of wet straw, and his hair was plastered down on his forehead in a style that stamped him from afar. He was on dress parade and filled with pride. From his highly polished boots to his brilliant new tie he was resplendent and new. He swaggered into the place with the air of a conqueror, and the foreman rested his lather brush in his victim's ear while he leaned over confidentially and whispered:

"That's Charley; you've heard me speak of him, ain't you?"

"Well," said the large man in the chair, "if there is anything under heaven or on earth that you haven't spoken of—"

"Yes," said the foreman, hurriedly, "but this here boy is the dandy masher of the universe, and is known all over New York. Why—"

"You need not shave off my moustache."

"Ah, there, Charley," catching the visitor's eye and smiling with a pleased expression, "how are ail the dear girls?"

"Well, they're expensive as usual," answered the visitor, with an affectation of earnestness. "Gimme a light for my seegar, please."

Four of the barber's left their chairs at once to get a match, and four of the customers sat upright in their chairs and looked around with lathered and expressive faces at the very popular German with the blue necktie. The expression on the face of the large man, whose ear had been lathered, was not kindly.

"Charley," said the boss, "what's become of the millionaire's daughter in Brooklyn that was running after you?"

"What, C. B., the millionaire's daughter on Clinton avenue.

"No," said the boss, with a very confidential wink, "I was referring to M. N. E., the sugar refiner's daughter."

"Oh, I chucked that over long ago," said Charley, strutting up and down with a face that was adorned by a look of ineffable complacency and an unusually offensive barber cigar, while the large man rose up perilously under the razor and stared at him.

"How's the little actress, Charley?" ventured the foreman, insinuatingly.

"Which, the one at the Bijou?" asked Charley, turning away from the mirror, where he had been gazing with undisguised delight at his putty-like mug.

"Oh, no; I mean the little one at the Casino."

"Oh, I got a letter from her last night; she's a sticker from way back."

Once more the large man sat up, and when he lay down again his voice arose plaintively:

"Charley, you make me very weary!"

The barbers looked around in surprise, and the visitor ceased curling his moustache and turned around.

"In fact, Charley," continued the man, "you are about the worst specimen of a smooth-bored, bevel-edged, and cheerful liar that I ever heard."

Then the large man lay back in his chair, and the shave was finished in absolute silence.—N. Y. Sun.

LOOKING AHEAD.

Keep a sharp lookout while on the run?" echoed an engineer. "Should say we did. The man who tries to run an engine without keeping his eye peeled gets left sooner or later. I've heard about fellows out west that would start on a run with a board reaching across from the driver's seat to the fireman's, and a deck of cards, but I've never tried that. Just to show you how neccessary it is for a man to keep his eye on the rails ahead of him let me tell you a little story. I was running along one night in Ohio some years ago. It was a blowy, rainy, nasty night, and in times like that a man is doubly watchful. For hours I never took my eyes from the wet, glistening rails ahead of me, except, of course, when we stopped at stations. All at once I saw in front of me—how far away I couldn't tell—a glimmer of light. It was just a spark. I barely saw it before it disappeared. Was it a lightning-bug? I had not seen any that night. What was it. That I could not answer. But my instinct told me to stop the train, and stop it I did. It was mighty lucky I looked at it in that way, for that glimmer of light was caused in the oddest way you ever saw. You couldn't guess it in a week. A farmer was walking along the track, when he discovered a short bridge so badly washed out by the freshet that to run a train upon it meant a wreck. He tried to start a fire with paper and his clothing but couldn't do it. He had one match left. He kept that until I got close to him, his plan being to strike the match, hold it in his hat, and wave it across the track as he had seen the brakemen do when they wanted to signal stop. It was his hope that I would see the blaze before it was blown out. He no sooner struck the match than out went the blaze. It was merely a flash, but I saw it and the farmer had saved the train. What if I had not made it a rule to keep my eyes peeled along the rails every minute while running?"—Chicago Herald.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 4, 1887.

CONGRESS adjourned this noon. The anti-polygamy and trade dollar redemption bills have become laws without the president's signature.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA has appeared at Boston among some cows brought from Buffalo recently, and active measures are being taken to suppress the disease.

THE House at Washington finally passed the Senate retaliatory bill, Wednesday, authorizing the president to exclude Canadian vessels and products from any United States port.

THE yacht Mayflower is going to beard the lion in his den this season by crossing the ocean to enter several races, hoping above all other things to be able to bring home the queen's cup, which has been held by the Arrow for many years.

THE proposition to amend the constitution by abolishing the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting has been defeated in the House. We believe thinking people will very generally be gratified with the result. The tax is not a burdensome one, and the privilege of voting is certainly worth something.

NEW JERSEY is to have a Democrat in the United States Senate, the long contest in the Legislature between Senator Sewall and Gov. Abbett being terminated Wednesday by the election of Rufus Blodgett, the Republicans going over to him in a body. He is president of the Long Branch Railroad, a stanch Democrat and a fluent speaker.

RAILROAD managers are learning something from the dreadful railroad holocausts of this winter. The Boston and Albany and New York and New Haven roads will soon have their fast express trains equipped with steam heat and electric lights, and the Central Vermont is moving in the same direction, to say nothing of various other roads that are doing likewise. Any railroad that uses stoves in heating its cars next winter ought to be boycotted by the traveling public.

MRS. DRUSE of Warren, N. Y., was hanged at Herkimer Monday for the murder of her husband, every effort for the commutation of her sentence having failed, as it should. A woman who can shoot her husband and then cut up and burn the body by piecemeal in the kitchen stove, helped by her grown-up daughter and little son, is better out of the world than in it. The daughter is serving a life sentence in the penitentiary, but stoutly affirms her innocence, as did her mother, and an effort is being made to secure her pardon.

ACCORDING to Wm. M. Ivins, city chamberlain of New York, it cost Mayor Hewitt $24,000 to be elected, Tammany and the County Democracy receiving $12,000 each, and other candidates are assessed in like manner, according to their ability to pay, the sums ranging from $500 to $40,000. It is all for "legitimate expenses," of course, but it is a long departure from Democratic simplicity when any sort of an election can cost a candidate a fraction of these enormous sums for expenses that make any pretense of being legitimate.

THE president on Monday nominated James M. Trotter of Hyde Park, Mass., as a recorder of deeds at Washington, in place of Matthews, who has been rejected twice by the Senate. Trotter is a negro who served creditably in the 55th Mass. Regiment, and was in the Boston post office for a number of years. But after rejecting Matthews the Senate could hardly confirm Trotter, another non-resident, and he was rejected Thursday. But he has been appointed deputy recorder by Mathews, as he cannot officiate after to-day, and will likely hold the lucrative office for several months at least.

GOV. HILL of New York wants to be president of the United States, and he wants it so bad that he has truckled to the labor agitators in the most abject manner, even suggesting officially that the boycott should be legalized, that the laws to protect men from conspiracy should be repealed, and so on. The governor spoke at a Democratic meeting in Brooklyn the other evening, and a letter from Mayor Hewitt was to be read at the same time. But the letter was found to consist largely of a vigorous, manly protest against the despotic assumptions of the Knights of Labor, and in deference to the governor the letter was suppressed. A more unfortunate thing for him could not have happened, for the letter has now been published, and given much greater prominence than it would have had otherwise, and it shows up the governor's cowardly demagogism in such a sickening light that he must have felt like kicking himself ever since.

Two recent court decisions in regard to boycotts are of considerable interest to people in general, and to workingmen in particular. The Connecticut supreme court decides that certain walking delegates who undertook to prevent persons from doing business with a firm which had been boycotted by a trade union were guilty of conspiracy, and must be punished as lawbreakers. Judge Brown, of the United States circuit court at New York, decides that the procurement of workingmen to stop work in order injure the business of the Old Dominion Steamship company, was a malicious interference which is actionable; and that the attempt to prevent persons from doing business with the company was "not only illegal, rendering the defendants liable in damages, but also a misdemeanor at common law." He concludes with this broad and clear statement:—

> Associations have no more right to inflict injury upon others than individuals have: all combinations and associations designed to coerce workmen to become members, or to interfere with, obstruct, vex, or annoy them in working or in obtaining work because they are not members, or in order to induce them to become members, or designed to prevent employers from making a just discrimination paid to the skillful and unskillful, to the diligent and lazy, to the efficient and inefficient; and all associations designed to interfere with the perfect freedom of employers in the proper management and control of their lawful business, or to dictate in any particular the terms upon which their business shall be conducted, by means of threats of injury or loss, by interference with their property or traffic, or with their lawful employment of other persons, or designed to abridge any of these rights, are illegal combinations or associations, and all acts done in furtherance of such intentions, by such means and accompanied by damage, are actionable.

The district court last Friday assessed John Nolan, Charles Underwood and John Lynch $3 and costs each for drunkenness, which they had not, and so were sent up. Tuesday of this week Jerry Shea delivered up $6.73 for a too liberal indulgence in the ardent, and yesterday Thomas Carnes and Frank Aiken of Brookfield paid $6.98 and $6.63 for similiar troubles.

The Mohawk Minstrels will appear at the Park street opera house next Tuesday evening. The company is composed wholly of local talent, and the boys have worked hard to produce a good programme, and they promise some immense hits. Of course all who went last year will go again, and all who have not seen them should help to give a good house. Seats are selling rapidly.

The engineer of the 5.32 express last evening had a narrow escape from death just this side of West Brimfield, when the connecting rod on his side broke while the train was going at the rate of thirty miles an hour. At every revolution of the wheels the rod struck the cab with terrible force, smashing it to splinters and bending it almost double, and but for the engineer having just stepped down from his seat, he would probably have been killed.

The growing popularity of the reading room is clearly demonstrated by the steadily increasing number of its patrons. It has now entered upon its fourth month. The average attendance during the first month was 9; for the second month 12; and for the third month 15, the largest attendance being 38. This would seem to demonstrate conclusively that the reading room is no longer an experiment, but is a plain necessity and also and assured success.

Some of the members of the Thorndike Democratic Club, at the meeting last week, attempted an underhand piece of work in endeavoring to get the club, under the name of the Palmer Democratic Club, to indorse one of its members for the position of postmaster in this village, with the expectation that the action would have some effect at Washington in the selection of a man for the place. There is no "Palmer Democratic Club," the Thorndike Democratic Club being an organization of that place, with only three or four members in this village.

The Boston and Albany road has contracted with the Martin anti-fire car heating company for the fitting of some 20 passenger cars with their system of heating by steam from the engine. The cars are to be run on the fast express trains between Boston and New York. For nearly a month they have also been lighting two trains on the eastern end of the road by electricity, with the intention, if it works well, of lighting all its cars by it. Each car is lighted with 20 incandescent lamps of 16-candle power each, which give a much more satisfactory light than even the best of lamps.

The very generous offer of Mr. Willis to donate to the town a lot on Thorndike street for the erection of a memorial building is one which ought to be promptly accepted. All things considered, we doubt whether a more desirable location can be found, nor can a better time for the inauguration of the work be found than at present. Almost a quarter of a century has passed since the close of the war, and Palmer has nothing to show in the way of a public memorial of the brave men who gave themselves to their country's service in her hour of need. There can surely be no good reason for waiting longer. Let the soldiers who are still living see that the town has not forgotten them, but is ready to meet their desires in a handsome and generous manner.

There were ten sadly disappointed men in Palmer Tuesday morning when it was known that the president had nominated Clarence A. Brown for postmaster at this place. The appointment—as the nomination will undoubtedly be confirmed—probably is as satisfactory as any would have been, unless Mr. Knox could have been his own successor, and Mr. Brown will doubtless give good satisfaction, his plan being to keep Mr. Knox in charge of the office, for the present, at least, if he will stay. Of course everybody will want to know whether the office will be moved or remain where it is now located. For the present it will remain where it is, but should the public desire a change, and wish to have the office where the sidewalk is not crowded with loafers at all times, they will be accommodated.

Palmer Endeavors see only brightness and joy in the Christian life, hence their motto, "Be good, do good and have a good time." As to the first two points let others speak, but as to the last point the verdict rests with the Endeavors themselves, and that verdict is unanimous. But if one Endeavor is a happy being, what shall be said of a combination of Endeavors? Who shall do justice to an Endeavor social? And has the genius yet arisen who can tell of two Endeavor socials combined in one? And this leads us to say that every one of the sixty members of the Palmer society who went to Wilbraham last Friday will bear the strongest testimony to the royal welcome and generous hospitality which our Wilbraham friends extended to their visitors. We did, indeed, have a grand good time, thanks to the young men and women of Wilbraham, and thanks in particular to the Endeavor Glee Club who gave us so much genuine enjoyment by their songs. * *

NEW WEATHER SIGNALS.

Beginning with to-morrow morning an improved system of weather signals will be displayed from the JOURNAL office, the Signal Service having adopted the new system after a careful test of various kinds, as being the simplest and most legible. Heretofore seven flags have been used, but the number is now reduced to four, as follows:

Number 1, white flag, always indicates clear or fair weather.

Number 2, blue flag, indicates rain or snow.

Number 3, black triangular flag, always refers to temperature. When placed above the numbers 1 or 2 it indicates warmer weather; when placed below numbers 1 or 2 it indicates colder weather; when not displayed, the indications are that the weather will remain stationary, or that the change will not vary five degrees from the temperature of the same hour of the preceding day.

Number 4, cold wave flag, is the same as heretofore, a white flag with black center. This signal is usually ordered 24 hours in advance of the cold wave. It is not displayed unless a temperature of 45 degress or less is expected, nor is flag 3 displayed with it.

Cut this out and keep it for future reference.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

We gave last week the programme of the Sunday School convention of the Hampden county conference of Congregational churches. That programme was duly carried out on Tuesday of this week. The attendance at the convention was large, and the interest sustained till the close. Rev. R. T. Oaks of Chicopee Falls presided. Rev. Orville Reed of Springfield read the first paper, his subject being "Preparation for Teaching." Commence studying the lesson Sunday evening if possible, get the subject into your mind, and give time and thought to it daily. Study the lesson, Bible in hand, reducing all "helps" to a secondary position. Study the individuals of the class with a view to their surroundings, and their mental and spiritual needs. Rev. Herbert Macy of Chicopee summed up the discussion and was followed by H. P. Stone of Springfield, who read a paper on teaching. Mrs. Ferry of Westfield, gave a talk on primary work, which was wonderfully interesting because she spoke from the fullness of her own experience, and out of a heart overflowing with love to the little ones. Mrs. Ferry certainly convinced all of the truth of her opening statement, "that primary teaching was at once the most delightful and most important." After a paper by Rev. W. P. Draper of Springfield, on grading Sunday school classes, the discussion of the afternoon was closed by Rev. S. H. Blake of Westfield in a talk on teaching followed by personal effort.

Upon the adjournment of the afternoon session all visitors who could remain for the evening service were entertained by the women of the society.

A full house greeted Rev. Dr. Geo. M. Stone of Hartford, when at 7.30 in the evening he began his address on "Methods of Bible Study." The address was inspiring and instructive. Reserve power, the speaker said, decided the result in every important crisis in life. Hence the necessity of a reserve fund of knowledge of the Scriptures which one might bring into play at critical moments of his teaching. The Bible is a clear transcript of the mind of God. Our English version is fair and reliable. The Bible can be mastered, and that, too, by the busiest person. The Bible is a literary masterpiece,—it is a model of brief and vigorous statement, and a perfect mirror of truth. We are reading everything but the Bible, even commentaries. But the Jews lost the Bible through commentaries. Study the Bible by books, because each book has its own peculiar characteristics. The gospels are not repetitions, but give four sides of our life. Matthew represents Christ as the Jewish Messiah. Mark paints him as the servant, and Luke shows him as the Savior of the Gentiles. John crowns the work by treating of Christ as the Son of God. Study by words, looking for the key-word of every book. The key word of Proverbs is wisdom; of Psalms, praise; of John, sight, life and love; of James, works; and so on to the end. Study the Bible also as a whole, comparing part with part; only thus can its full significance be discovered. You can't ride a hobby all the way through the Bible. Study in connection with the signs of the times, and in the light of the scientific revelations of the age. Ministers especially should study the reading of the Scriptures as a matter of elocution. The speaker then gave the parable of the prodigal son, from memory, as an illustration of what might be done in this direction. The breathless attention of the audience to this rendering testified the speaker's power.

The convention closed with the opening of the question box.

It is hoped that something will be done to stop the sale during the coming year.

The Young Ladies' Guild had a social at the town house Wednesday evening, and a baked bean supper was served, a large number partaking of it. When about twenty of our young people met one evening in November to talk over a plan to form a Christian Endeavor society there was just a little feeling of uncertainty among us whether we were not undertaking too much. We were forming a new church, our numbers were few, and these few had been engaged for years in carrying on the work of Christ here, all trying faithfully to do their part, and we thought we were doing about all we could for the Master. Now, after two months of effort, as we see what has been accomplished, we are filled with deep thankfulness for the past and hope for the future. We now number thirty active and about twenty associate members. Our meetings are well attended and of much interest. Many young people that we had long hoped to see interested have been brought in, some as associate and some as active members, and our church gets its first new members from our ranks. We are confident that we are in the right road and feel to thank God and take courage.

The committee of the Social Science Society will be in the public reading room every Thursday afternoon from two to four o'clock, and any persons wishing for papers, etc., can call for them at that time.

There is to be a town meeting next Tuesday to see if the town will appropriate the sum of $5000 to close up the accounts of the town in anticipation of next year's taxes. A part of this amount is to pay for night schools.

Fire was discovered about five o'clock Sunday morning in the new two-tenement house of C. H. Trench on North street, and it was soon burned to the ground. It is supposed that the fire caught from the stoves that were in the building to dry the plastering. Loss about $2000, insured for $1000.

Is the post office to be moved from its present location? is the question of the week that is agitating the business community. It is rumored that J. H. Storrs has made favorable proposals to have it located in his new block, which is no doubt to be the finest in town, but it is by no means as near the business center or the center of population of the town as the present location of the office. A petition has been circulated and a large number of signatures obtained asking to have it remain where it is.

CARD.—I wish to express my sincere thanks for the kindness tendered me by friends and neighbors during the recent illness of my husband.

BOSTON and Duluth are talking of being brought 300 miles nearer together by a new railway system, consisting of a line now building from Brockville, Ont., to Sault Ste Marie, with an extension across the state of New York connecting with the Boston, Hoosac Tunnel and Western road, and, probably, with the Central Massachusetts. It is said operations will be begun at once.

NEW ENGLAND was visited last Saturday by one of the severest snow-storms of the winter, and in Vermont trains were blockaded on the railroads and everything brought to a stand still for a time by violence of the storm. Winter gives up his grip grudgingly.

The earthquake in Italy deprived 20,000 people of their homes and destroyed $10,000,000 worth of property. The loss of life is not as large as at first reported, but will exceed 600, according to the latest accounts.

Northampton had a $20,000 fire last Monday morning. There was a $450,000 fire on the Morgan Line dock in New York the same morning, and the steamer Lone Star was almost totally destroyed.

One of the largest steamers plying on the Tombigbee river was burned Tuesday afternoon, three miles below Gainsville, Ala., and ten white and ten colored persons lost their lives.

Six boys walking on the railroad track near Easton, Pa., last Saturday, were struck and killed by an express train.

A Chinese junk with 600 persons on board was recently wrecked, and only six escaped.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 2d, 1887.

Only one speech of length was made in the House Thursday, on the resolve to abolish the poll tax as a suffrage qualification. An agreement was made, in the interest of saving time, to postpone the debate to the next stage, when a two-thirds vote would be necessary, whereas a majority would be enough for the first stage. The one speech was by Mr. Kent of Worcester, in strong opposition to the resolve. He insisted that there is no natural or inalienable right to vote, and that the people of the state have always held that position. New York state's being under control of the worst elements of New York city he attributed to the lack of such a tax as Massachusetts has, and said that if the tax should be abolished as proposed, Massachusetts would be controlled by the worst elements of Boston within two years. The great event of this week has been the debate and vote on this resolve. It seemed for several days as if the longer the vote was delayed, the larger it would be against the resolve. On Tuesday afternoon it was taken up and eight speeches were made, of which the best were those of Mr. McDonough of Boston and Mr. Walker of Worcester in favor of the resolve. But the debate Wednesday afternoon brought out a new speaker, Mr. Gile of Worcester, who proved himself one of the best debaters of the whole body. In a friendly, but keen manner, he replied to Mr. Walker of Worcester, and then made such an attack upon Butler as has never been made in the Legislature since the famous Tewksbury investigation. But not a Democrat felt called upon to defend the memory of his old chief. Mr. Gile charged Butler with beginning in 1878 the poll tax agitation (for it had been unheard of since 1853 when the people refused to adopt the amendment) and using it for his own advantage. In 1878 was the burglary of the Butler party, he said, in Mechanics Hall, Worcester. In 1879, the poll tax was separated from other taxes. In 1882, Butler, reaping where he had sown, and paying out $23,000 in poll taxes himself, was elected governor, and he had disgraced the governorship of Massachusetts more than he could ever make atonement for, even if he should do penance till the day of his death. Mr. Quincy of Quincy, one of the bright and clean young Democrats of the House, spoke in favor of the resolve, and insisted that the poor men do help pay for the support of the government, for the articles they consume are so heavily taxed. Mr. Fales of Milford, Democrat, told the Republicans that if they defeated the resolve they would enter the grave of the old federal or tory parties. But he did not seem to frighten them, for the vote stood 136 yeas to 90 nays, or many less than the necessary two-thirds. Mr. Gaylord of South Hadley was the only Democrat who voted against the resolve. This settles the matter for at least two years. Mr. Taft of Palmer voted for the resolve.

A new Sunday law has been reported by the judiciary committee of the House. To a considerable extent it repeats the old law, in forbidding all games or plays on Sunday, and it also follows the old law as to keeping open shops or warehouses, or doing any kind of labor, except works of necessity or charity. But it expressly permits Sunday work for gas and water companies, telegraph and telephone companies, livery stables, steam and horse cars, newspapers, milkmen, barbers and bakers.

Debate on the municipal woman suffrage bill was postponed by the House Thursday, for one week.

Ought to pass has been reported by the treasury committee on the resolve appropriating $20,000 for the soldiers' home in Chelsea.

The labor committee has reported a bill for better sanitary regulations in all factories and workshops with over five employes. It requires precautions against foul air from pipes and drains.

Ought to pass has been reported by the treasury committee on the bill to prevent the spread of contagious diseases among domestic animals.

Somebodys' pet schemes were rudely handled on Friday. Adverse reports were presented on making the financial year of the state end June 30; on requiring the date of canning to be marked on all canned goods; on changing the law in regard to the insolvency of small debtors; on requiring inventories of estates of deceased persons to be made in probate, the consent of interested persons to the contrary notwithstanding; on imprisoning intoxicated persons until they testify against the persons who sold them the liquor.

By a large vote the House engrossed Thursday the bill to restrict the exercise of liquor license in tenements. It was aimed at the private family rum-hole, and Mr. Darling of Somerville brought down the applause of the House by his spirited defense of the bill. An attempt was made Friday by Mr. Taft of Palmer to get a reconsideration of the engrossment of the bill. He sympathized with the purpose of the bill, but the word tenement had been held by the courts to have a wide interpretation, and he believed the bill should be debated further. But the House was against him, 79 to 92. Two sharp debates occurred yesterday and to-day in the Senate over this bill. It was defeated yesterday, and reconsideration was refused to-day. The occasion makes the temperance Republicans somewhat bitter against the third party temperance men, for three good temperance Republicans, who would have voted for prohibition, were defeated by free-rum Democrats because of the third party vote. Had the third party men voted for the prohibitory Republican candidate, they could have had this restrictive measure, but now it fails.

Great interest is felt here over the project to revive the old charter of the Williamsburg and North Adams railroad, and give an independent line to the West over the Berkshire hills.

The Cape Cod canal hearing drags along, and a great amount of capital is fighting sharply on each side.

On Wednesday there was reported in the Senate a bill to incorporate Jonas G. Clark, George F. Hoar, Charles Devens and others as the Clark University in Worcester. This is the great plan for a million-dollar endowment, with a promise of more.

A bill by Dr. Walker of Worcester has been reported, to punish severely the false registration of animals, or giving false pedigrees of them. LANDON.

CREAM AND COLD WEATHER.

What a luxury is a bath in summer. Surely, but a greater luxury is a clear head in winter; just when almost everybody is sneezing and snuffling with a cold in the head. But when you are attacked use Ely's Cream Balm. It cures colds in the head, and what is better, it cures the worst cases of chronic catarrh and hay fever. Not a liquid, not a snuff. Pleasant to use. Quick relief. Radical cure.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

Wherefore we pray your honorable board to view said premises and to locate anew said highway and establish the boundry lines thereof.

Consider Me, the plant says, "I sustain man. Know then how to plant, cultivate and feed me; for if you feed me, I will feed you." The Stockbridge Special Manures feed crops according to their special wants. BOWKER FERTILIZER CO.

Thirty Million herdsgrass plants, it is estimated grow on an acre, well seeded. When 400 lbs. of Stockbridge Grass Manure is applied, each pound applied nourishes 75,000 grass plants, and yet it is so concentrated that it will increase the yield of hay from one to two tons. BOWKER FERTILIZER CO., Boston, Mass.

3 1-2 Tons of hay per acre has been raised by many a farmer with the Stockbridge Grass Manure. It is prepared from chemicals, and is applied on the surface, without any loss. Try it. BOWKER FERTILIZER CO., Boston and New York.

50 to 100 per cent profit. Mr. Hubbard of Bridgewater, Mass., writes: "In half a dozen years' use of the Stockbridge Top Dressing, I have received a net profit of 50 to 100 per cent, according to amount applied, character of season, and condition of soil. At 800 lbs. per acre, it has produced effects plainly visible the third year." BOWKER FERTILIZER CO.

Mr. Way, of Rockingham, Vt., writes: "The Stockbridge Manure gave two tons of hay per acre where only one grew before." He is a benefactor who can make two blades of grass grow where one grew before. BOWKER FERTILIZER CO.

Chemists claim plants will substitute soda for potash, and magnesia for lime; but, when forced to substitute, or wait for plant food to develop, an unhealthy condition is the result. The Stockbridge Special Manures produce healthy, vigorous crops. BOWKER FERTIRLIZER CO., Boston and New York.

1-4 Pound of fertilizer is what each hill of corn gets when 1000 lbs. of Stockbridge Corn Manure is applied to the acre; but it produces from 60 to 80 bushels of corn to the acre, because it it is made for and adapted to the corn crop. BOWKER FERTILIZER CO.

Time Turns the Tables.

Ten years ago, when she was ten
I used to tease and scold her;
I liked her and she loved me then,
A boy, some five years older.

I liked her; she would fetch my book,
Bring lunch to stream or thicket;
Would oil my gun and bait my hook,
And field for hours at cricket.

She'd mend my cap or find my whip:
Ah! but boy's hearts are stony;
I liked her rather less than "Gyp,"
And far less than my pony.

She loved me then, though Heaven knows why,
Small wonder she had hated;
For scores of dolls she had to cry,
Whom I decapitated.

I tore her frocks, I mussed her hair,
Called "red" the sheen upon it;
Out fishing I would even dare
Catch tad-poles in her bonnet.

Well, now I expiate my crime—
The Nemesis of fables
Comes after years; to-day old Time
On me has turned the tables.

I'm twenty-five, she's twenty now,
Dark-eyed, fair-cheeked and bonny;
The curls are golden round her brow—
She smiles and calls me "Johnny."

Of yore, I used her Christian name,
But now, through fate or malice,
When she is by, my lips can't frame
The letters that spell "Alice."

I who could laugh at her and tease,
Stand silent now before her;
Dumb through the very wish to please,
A speechless, shy adorer.

Or, if she turns to me to speak,
I'm dazzled by her graces;
The hot blood rushes to my cheek,
I babble commonplaces.

She's kind and cool; ah! Heaven knows how
I wish she blushed and faltered!
She likes me and I love her now;
Ah me! how things have altered!

TAKE CARE OF THE FEET.

Ladies whose feet have become misshapen from excessively narrow boots can do much to remedy the difficulty by care and pains. Select easy, roomy shoes, and stockings of soft fabric. Bathe the feet thoroughly in water comfortably warm, never allowing it to grow cold enough to feel chilly, and wipe them thoroughly dry with a soft towel—coarse crash is almost poison to sensitive skins, and often causes irritation and a small eruption like rash. Then rub into them thoroughly about the joints or injured parts either cold cream, or what is better, glycerine, perfectly pure, and mixed with double the quantity of water. Especially should it be diligently applied to the joints of the great toes if they are enlarged or painful. Wipe off with a damp cloth and dry carefully, after which powder the feet thoroughly with rice flour powder. Brush off all that comes away easily and put on the stocking, being careful that no semblance of a seam comes over the sensitive joints. Adjust the shoe carefully—never "jump into" any article of wearing apparel—smooth the boot over the foot and ankle, if it is a high top, and be certain that it is comfortable.

These cautions may seem trifles, but the feet are ill, and all conditions of recovery must be observed. Take care that they do not get very cold or in the least damp. The ankle should also be protected by gaiters or leggings, if there is any necessity for going out in wet weather. The difficulty is an inflammation of the joint membranes, and has had many serious results. At night the feet may be wiped off with a damp cloth, and the glycerine and powder repeated. Ladies who adopt this plan will never find soft corns coming between the toes. For hard corns there is nothing better than a little judiciously applied caustic, which should just touch the hardened part of the corn, never the surrounding flesh. Repeat every other day, first soaking the feet in warm water and gently scraping the surface of the corn until finally it will come out altogether. Great care must be taken to keep the caustic from the whole flesh, and the foot should never be damp, as the application will spread rapidly. Such a course of treatment, patiently followed, has in several cases restored to quite passable shape and comfort feet that were considered as hopelessly deformed.—Demorest's Monthly.

THE HEIFER.

I am convinced, says a correspondent of the New York Tribune, by an experience of near fifty years, that it is well to tie the legs of every heifer, no matter how gentle, for a short time, say a week or ten days, as a part of her discipline and training when being learned to milk. She will never forget it when a large, strong cow, and then if her teats get scratched or chapped so that she must be tied to be milked, she will submit with a very good grace, otherwise she may object as strongly as one of ours did a while ago. We attempted to tie her legs; she reared up behind, both feet, like a mule, causing one or two of us to make elevated as well as rapid transit.

One of our school teachers was trying to teach a small boy in her class the meaning of the word "collision." She said: "Suppose two boys running on the street should come together real hard. What would there be?" "A fight," responded the little fellow loudly, and with astonishing promptness, and the teacher gave it up.—Bangor Commercial.

Small girl—"Ma, what are the tides? Do they grow like strawberries?"

Mother—"Tides grow? what now!"

Small girl—"Well, what does our minister mean when he keeps talking about stemming the tide?"—Burlington Free Press.

THE FAITH CURE.

If you do not value your health, and your time is not worth anything, pin your faith to the "annointing oil," or the mortar from "Knock Chapel." But if you do value health, and have not time to waste in useless experiments, take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" on the first appearance of symptoms of consumption; which are a loss of appetite and flesh, general debility, slight, dry, hacking cough, etc. Every day you defer treating your case in a rational manner, makes the disease harder to combat. Send ten cents in stamps to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for Dr. Pierce's Treatise on consumption.

Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer gives immediate relief, and cures severest coughs, colds, and malignant fevers, sore throat, asthma, etc. 25c., 50c. and $1 sizes.

For costiveness, biliousness, headache and all feverish habits use Dr. Seth Arnold's Bilious Pills. 25 cents.

Mothers, always use Dr. Seth Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial for children. A mild, safe tonic. 25c.

THE LAWN IN WINTER.

And this reminds us to say that if you have any regard for tasteful appearances and pleasant odors do not convert the lawn about the dwelling, and particularly under the parlor or sitting-room windows, into a compost yard during the winter. If compost is to be used on the grass let it be compost, thoroughly rotted, and so fine that it will disappear among the stubble. Coarse, rank horse manure strewn in great lumps and intermingled with stable bedding, is a blemish on anybody's lawn, however wealthy or fashionable the owners may be. As well move into the stable at once, leaving all ideas of refinement behind, as to surround the dwelling house with the wastes of the stable to give off their foul odors for several months in the winter. With such inoffensive commercial fertilizers as are now to be had at reasonable prices, there is little excuse for any one to use stinking manures on the lawn at any season of the year. Farmers who do their own stable work should leave their barn clothes behind them when they attend town meeting or public evening lectures, and appear in apparel suitable to the place; but villagers who make a compost yard of their own lawns for nearly half the year, should be a little guarded in their "agricultural" allusions and remarks, when they happen in such places to come in contact with one who in his hurry neglected to doff his every day boots before joining his neighbors. We do not like to discuss this subject, but as there is still occasion for it, it remains a duty. Besides, we like to see men and women consistent. Applying unfermented stable manure to the lawns of village homes, to lie under the windows twenty weeks, and where the occupants are so refined that they can't speak of manure except as "dressing," is very much like straining at a knat and gulping down a whole camel, "dressing" and all.—N. E. Farmer.

The king-bird or phebe-bird is too often stoned and shot and frightened—and almost any farmer's boy deems it a duty to risk his neck while climbing under a bridge to get at and destroy its mud nest. Why? He kills our bees!" Well, yes, he does kill bees. He is very cunning about it, too. He watches the hive, setting very near, as the bees go and come under his very nose, and sometimes he is impudent enough to alight close to the enterance, and rap with his bill to announce that he is making a call! Oh! what a rascal! A murderer, calling his victim to the door of his own house, that he may kill, and then eat him! And when the bees come to the door to answer the knock, Mr. Phebe selects the largest bee, and makes off to the fence-corner or to his mud nest to enjoy his prize. But the queer part of it all is that he only eats the drone bees, which never store any honey, and when the flowers become scarce the working bees kill these lazy drones and pitch them out of the hive. So the king-bird is a help, instead of a damage, to the bee-raiser.

"What are the elements?" asked a teacher of a small boy at one of our rural schools a few days ago. "Air, fire, water and whisky," was the unexpected reply.

"Why," said the teacher, "do you call whisky one of the elements?"

"'Cause when pap comes home full of whisky, ma says he is in his element."—Waynesburg Republican.

Waiting for her to retract. "Orlando, I didn't see you with Miss Brown at the concert last night."

"No Percy. I am not calling on her any more. I can't till she retracts what she said the other week."

"Ah, what did she say?"

"Well, she said I needn't call any more."—Harper's Bazar.

Frankness. Mistress—"The coffee is so strong this morning that it is absolutely bitter, Kathleen."

Maid—"Yis, ma'am. The polaceman on this bate do be complaining av the wakeness av it all winter, an' durin' the cowld wither cook is after humorin' the poor divil a bit."—Tid bits.

There will be no leap year between 1896 and 1904, 1900 not being leap year according to the Gregorian calenday. We make this announcement now, because we think it is only just that intending young women should have timely warning.—Somerville

"Boy, can I go through this gate to the river?" politely inquired a fashionably dressed lady.

"Yes'm; a load of hay went through this morning," was the urchin's horrid reply.—Atlanta Constitution.

There are two things in the world that I can't understand; one is that you catch a cold without trying; that is if you let it run on it stays with you, and if you stop it it goes away.—Burdette.

Canada should not laugh at our navy. It is nothing to laugh at. N. B.—Place extra emphasis on the word 'nothing.'—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

It is said that eight of Brigham Young's widows have died in the past year. No wonder the old man came back to earth again.—Yonkers Statesman.

The Whitney baby seems to be the most popular craft in the navy just now, and the only one that can go through a serious squall.—Hartford Post.

It is bad enough to break party ties, but it is not half so embarrassing as to have them work around under your ear.—Burlington Free Press.

RHEUMATISM

Is a disease in the Blood and must be treated with internal remedies. It has been cured nine times out of ten by the use of

BROWN'S

SALICYLINE!

Manufactured by F. M. Brown & Co., 224 West Water street, Elmira, N. Y. Sold be all druggists, 50 cents a bottle. 3

WHAT IS SCROFULA?

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, proves itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. Send for book of cures.

The Old Country Store.

How well I remember,
Perhaps you do too,
When the towns were much smaller,
And the country was new;
How the mails came on horseback,
Once a week, past our door,
And were straightway delivered
At the old country store.

There were dry goods and blankets,
Mixed up with the news;
There was ready-made clothing,
Hats and caps, boots and shoes;
There were large candy apples,
Which were red to the core,
And fat candy babies
At that old country store.

How often I ventured,
While awaiting the mails,
To price the toy playthings
I found there for sale.
There were no "five-cent counters"
In those glad days of yore;
And 'twas seldom I purchased
At that old country store.

A cheap line of hardware
Filled up the back end;
And a few crooked scythe-snaths,
With a natural bend,
Were kept in a barrel,
Which stood near the door,
With the things large and small,
In that old country store.

There were needles and thimbles,
Horse collars and cheese,
Tobacco and licorice,
Live rats and brisk fleas,
New Orleans molasses
Almost too thick to pour,
All under one roof,
In that old country store.

FAITH'S ELOPEMENT.

Far up on the step ladder, dusting the tops of the book case and picture frames, stood our diminutive heroine, Faith Bryson.

This was Wednesday, the general "cl'arin' up" day, as the kitchen factotum termed it, when a vigorous on-slaught was waged against the enemies, dirt and dust, until every corner shone again.

Just as Faith had mounted on tip-toe to an imiginary speck of dust far up on the wall, she heard a vigorous, manly step come ringing down the hall, and a cheery whistle that she knew. So she had just time to sit down on the top step of the ladder when an intrusive head appeared inside the door, and a laughing voice said pleadingly:

"Please, ma'am, may I come in?"

"No!" cried Faith, from the clouds, as it were, "of course not. Whatever possesses you to come over Wednesday mornings, when you are certain to find us in a plight, and I looking like a fright?"

"Which is a rhyme, oh ladye of mine," answered the intruder, awaiting no further persuasion, but walking in coolly enough, looking with such evident admiration at the fairy figure enthroned so far above his head, that the pretty eyelids drooped, and a quick tinge deepened in the fair cheek.

Perhaps you think a young lady with a sweeping cap on her head and a dust brush in her hand can't be made to look picturesque, but that shows your experience is at fault. Two or three moistened rings of golden hair had crept out from under the obnoxious cap, which, bound in blue, was far from unbecoming, and she made a bright bit of coloring against the dusky background of the somber-hued library.

"What's your errand, sir intruder, and how did you know where I was?" said Faith, at length breaking the silence that was rapidly becoming dangerous.

"I met your mother at the door, who graciously informed me of your whereabouts, and as to my errand, as though I needed any other motive power to give me a brisk three-quarters of a mile walk than to ascertain the condition of m'lady's health and happiness," bowing profoudly.

Have you done with nonsense Fred, and tell me the truth in plain Anglo-Saxon. Is that all you wanted to know?" and the red lips pouted so bewitchingly that Fred wished in the depths of his wicked heart that she was not quite so far away from him.

"Well, no, not quite all I want to know." he answerred, and Fred Clauson's voice had a queer ring in it, as he looked up at her in a way that caused the eye-lids to again fall over the blue eyes.

"But my principal errand here this morn is to invite your ladyship to ride down the river on the ice this afternoon, to Gainsborough. Fannie Gleason and Will Manchard, Minnie Gray and Ed. Brown are going. We will start just after dinner, and start back before dark."

"Oh, how charming, Fred!" cried Faith, slipping down from the ladder; "What lovely things you always think of! I'll go and see what mamma says;" And she flew toward mamma's room, with a little fear in her heart lest the whole affair should be vetoed by that excellent lady, for mamma never felt easy when Faith was on the river, although the road was essayed at the beginning of the winter, and tested every day by teams passing over it. Yet occassionally accidents would happen.

Least of all did she like the idea of her going with Fred Clauson, for these two had been in love with each other ever since they wore pinafores, and Fred was a little wild, not very bad, you know, but still some things that he did Deacon Bryson and his wife did not altogether approve of.

Now Will Manchard, a great good-natured fellow, with plenty of money, had been pretty attentive to Faith lately, and mamma was comforting herself with the thought Faith had outgrown her childish attachment. She raised no particular objection to the excursion now, particularly as wily Faith named over the ones who were going, putting Will Manchard's name first.

So Fred drove up soon after in his natty little Portland cutter, filled with warm robes and drawn by his fast trotter, at which Mamma Bryson looked askance, but she had her hands so full of wraps and warm soap-stones and her mind so full of parting admonitions to her daughter, that Fred luckily escaped the lecture he otherwise must inevitably have received on fast driving.

They made a handsome couple, even mamma could not help acknowledging that, and Faith's merry laugh came back more musical than the silver voiced bells to the loving mother's heart. For Faith, the only child, was idolized by her parents.

Soon they were flying down the river as only Fred's fast trotter could take them, so that they had reached Gainsborough far in advance of the rest of the party. They were not at all cold, and Faith disliked go to the hotel before the others came up. So a bright thought occured to Fred most opportunely.

"I have a little business to attend to at Angelica, only two miles from here across the country. Supposing we ride over there now; we will have ample time before they get here; and Faith, nothing loath, consented.

Now, I am inclined to think it was a deep plot on Fred's part, for it wasn't often lately that he had Faith all alone, and he ment to improve this afternoon. Faith, with women's marvelous intuition, devined what was coming, and had chatted unceasingly all the way down the river, and had skillfully diverted the subject when it grew dangerous.

So after leaving a merry meesage for their friends at the hotel, they started, Faith talking like a magpie until Fred saw that it was to be a repetition of the river ride, when he suddenly turned and said, without the slightest preface or premonition: "Faith Bryson, I love you dearly; will you be my wife?"

"Oh, Fred," said Faith, at bay, with her face in a crimson glow, "how can you be so unkind? No, of course I can't—I don't—I mean I do—" she stammered, getting more and more confused every moment because she was aware without looking that Fred was growing white, and glaring at her in a terrific way.

"Do you mean, Faith Bryson," he demanded. sternly, "that you have been deceiving me all these years, and that you do not love me?"

"No, of course I don't," said Faith, indignantly to the first question; but Fred chose to think, in his masculine perversity, that she did not love him, and in his blind passion he struck his spirited horse a blow which caused the maddened animal to spring aside, and in another moment they were both landed in the snow, and the horse had gone.

Faith was only stunned for a moment, but opening her eyes, she saw Fred lying near quite white and still, with the blood trickling in a tiny stream down his forehead.

Poor Faith thought him dead, and knelt beside him, supporting the dear wounded head in her arms, endeavoring to stop the trickling blood with her little handkerchief, and calling him so piteously and tenderly that he must have come back from death's door to have heard it.

I don't think Master Fred was as badly hurt as he pretended, but it was inexpressibly nice, after his recent misery, to lie in Faith's arms, and listen to her tender caressing words. So presently he ventured to groan feebly, never opening his eyes. His experiment was eminently successful, for Faith, forgetful of proprieties and everything but that she loved him, bent over him rapturously and kissed his forehead, entreating him to open his eyes and live once more.

"Oh, Fred, I do love you, and always have!" she exclaimed, at this comforting assurance the young man opened a pair of wide awake black eyes, with such an alarming twinkle in them that Faith came back to earth in a hurry, and tried to disengage herself, whereupon this bad youth showed such evident symptoms of a relapse that she dared not let him drop, so had to content herself with covering the mischievous eyes with her hand, and crying imploringly:

"Don't!"

"Yes, but I will, though," replied this audacious specimen of the genus homo. "Before I get up from here you must promise to be my wife!"

"Anything for a release," said Faith, saucily. "I—guess—I—will."

"Leave out the guess," demanded this inexorable tyrant.

"Well, I will, then!" replied Faith, quite meekly.

"That's right," with the utmost complacency; "now, then, give me another kiss."

"Fred Clauson," cried Faith. "I never did, and never will!"

"Faith, Faith, how can you perjure your soul with a falsehood? Didn't you kiss my forehead just before I opened my eyes?"

It was too much for human nature to endure. Faith bounded to her feet regardless of consequences, and then this pair of turtle doves awoke to the fact that they were in the woods without horse or cutter; that the short winter day was closing in upon them, and that a fine ice storm was falling, with the flakes as sharp as needles.

Fred had no idea were they were, for he calmly confessed that the trip to Angelica was a base fabrication. He had no idea where it was, and they were at least five miles from Gainsborough.

Faith hadn't the heart to reprove his wickedness, so after binding his wounded head up in her handkerchief, he started in the direction the horse had taken, leaving poor little Faith wrapped in the robes (which had fortunately been spilled out at the same time they were,) and frightened half to death at being left alone.

Luckily, he found the horse and cutter all uninjured about half a mile from there, and so returned quite quickly. But it was growing very dark, and Faith had grown benumbed with the cold. Fred walked her around a little while, and made her swallow some brandy that he had in his pocket, until the blood began to circulate once more. Then he put her in the cutter, holding her close in his arms, and drove swiftly toward the town.

Faith's consciousness was quite gone when they reached the hotel, and the landlady took her into her room and worked over her nearly an hour before the blue eyes opened again.

Meantime Fred had found that their friends had gone as soon as the storm commenced, and that now the track was so covered that all the teamsters had put up for the night. Fred paced the sitting room with his forehead knitted up thoughtfully.

He had sent a telegram to Father Bryson as soon as possible, explaining their detention, and saying that in all probability they could not reach home that night. He fancied how the scandal mongers would talk, and he knew that the strictly Puritanical notions of propriety held by Faith's father and mother would be terribly shocked. He could not bear that a single breath of suspicion should sully his pure, white flower. And while he was thinking, the door opened, and in walked Faith, looking a very snowy wraith, she was so white. Fred went to her, and took her tenderly in his arms and half carried her to a sofa, and after they had talked a little while, Faith said:

"Can we go home pretty soon, Fred?"

"My darling," said Fred, "the river is so covered with snow that it would be folly to risk our lives on it; besides you are not strong enough to ride twelve miles tonight. No dear, we must stay all night. I have telegraphed to your father just how it is."

Poor Faith commenced to cry as she thought of her father and mother, and Fred said quietly:

"You are thinking of what people will say, my darling, and I have been thinking of it also; and Faith, you must go home to-morrow as my wife."

"Oh, Fred, I cannot! I cannot!" cried Faith, aghast.

"My love, you must. You say you will marry me some day; why not at once, and avert all gossip? It will be as easy to get your father and mother to forgive us for that as it will to get them to sanction our engagement."

Faith stopped sobbing, but it required many more arguments to gain her consent. But Fred conquered at last, and Papa Bryson read the following telegram the next morning to his astonished wife, who had not slept all night in anxiety for her tenderly guarded child:

"Faith and I were married this morning at ten
Will be at the Grand Hotel at noon.
FRED CLAUSON."

Well, you can better imagine than I can describe the scene that ensued. How Papa Bryson stormed up and down the room, declaring he never would forgive them! When mamma heard that, she dried her tears, and said sharply:

"Nonsense! Not forgive them, indeed! Possibly you have forgotten how you urged me to elope with you from boarding school when I was fifteen and you eighteen. Humph! Not forgive them, indeed!"

Deacon Bryson looked at his better half with a queer look. Fat, fair and forty, she didn't look much like the young, romantic damsel who used to return his adoring glances with coquettish smiles that made him so madly in love that he quite lost his senses for a time. Now he never answered a word, but silently came over to her side and kissed her affectionately, and went off to meet the truants, while Mamma Bryson, blushing like a school girl at the unusual caress of her husband, went flying around on household thoughts intent, to get up as great a dinner as could be done on a short notice.

Oh, yes, of course they lived happily forever after. But isn't it better to let the curtain fall on the grand tableau of "Heaven bless you, my children!"—Farmer's Home Journal.

PROVERBS RELATING TO CLOUDS.

There can be no doubt that those who observe the clouds can make pretty shrewd guesses as to the weather for the next twenty-four hours. Proverbs relating to clouds are very numerous, and we give a few of those that are applicable at this time of the year:

Anvil-shape clouds are very likely to be followed by a gale of wind.

If the sky becomes darker, without much rain and divides into two layers of clouds, expect sudden gusts of wind.

Brassy-colored clouds in the west at sunset indicate wind.

If you see clouds going cross wind, there is a storm in the air.

When on clear days isolate clouds drive over the zenith from the rain-side, storm and rain follow within twenty-four hours.

If the clouds be of different hights, the sky being grayish or dirty blue, with hardly any wind stirring, the wind, however, changing from west to south, expect a storm.

Black clouds in the winter indicate approaching snow.

If on a fair day in winter a white bank of clouds arise in the south, expect snow.

Small black clouds drifring from the southwest is a sign of rain.

If in winter the clouds appear fleecy, with a very blue sky, expect cold rain or snow.

If a layer of thin clouds drive up from the northwest, and under other clouds moving more to the south, expect fine weather.

Clouds in the east, obscuring the sun, indicate fair weather.

If clouds at the same hight drive up with the wind and gradually become thinner and descend, expect fine weather.

Enough blue sky in the northwest to make a Scotchman a jacket, is a sign of approaching clear weather.

When the clouds hang on a mountain side after a rain, and the sun shines on top of the mountain, the storm is over.

By Their Fruits.

Would you know true Christian men
From their erring brothers,
Would you recognize them when
Mingle they with others?
Then unto your Bible go,
For here the way you'll find,
"By their fruits ye shall them know,"
So bear this text in mind.

In sheep's clothing you may see
False prophets, but beware,
For you'll find them inwardly
Wolves ravenous to tear
Flesh and soul, so bravely go
Inspecting all you meet,
"By their fruits ye shall them know,"
This maxim oft repeat,

Do men gather grapes of thorns,
Or of the thistle figs?
No, poor fruit the gardner warns,
And 'round the root he digs;
Soon the fallen tree will go
To make a ruddy blaze,
"By their fruits ye shall them know,"
'Tis harvest truth betrays.

L. F. S. B.

WHENCE THE HOUSE OF WASHINGTON DERIVED ITS NAME.

While every American has heard of Mount Vernon, probably not one in a hundred knows whence it derived the name. The unfortunate Duke of Monmouth had a private secretary named Vernon, a prudent, sensible business man, who, after the duke's death, found favor in influential quarters, and under William III became secretary of state. He left a son, Edward, born 1684, who, greatly against his father's wishes, entered the navy, and serving with early distinction, rose to the rank of admiral. In 1722 he was returned to the house of commons, and having in July, 1739, declared there that Porto Bello might be reduced with six sail of the line, and that he would stake his life and reputation on the success of the expedition, he was sent off with a squadron to do it, succeeded, and gave his men $10,000, which had just arrived to pay his troops. On returning home he received the thanks of both houses and the freedom of the city of London. From that time, however, his star declined. An expedition to Carthagena, made two years later, signally failed. Smollet, at that time a naval surgeon, accompanied the fleet, and has told the story of it in "Roderick Random," where he compares Vernon and General Wentworth, who commanded the auxillary land force, to Cæsar and Pompey. "The one," he says, "would not brook a superior, while the other was impatient of an equal; so that between the pride of one and the insolence of another the enterprise miscarried." It was in the land force at Carthagena that Lawrence Washington, George's elder brother by fourteen years, had served, and apparently he esteemed Vernon, as he gave his name to his home on the Potomac, and procured a midshipman's appointment for George, but his mother's interposition ultimately prevented the boy's availing himself of it, albeit she at first consented. Vernon's popularity was so great that his unlucky expedition does not seem to have affected it, and he was actually elected to parliament for three places at once on his return. Probably his known hostility to the government had much to do with this. In 1745 he was detailed to watch the North sea, in view of a movement of the Pretender's adherents. The next year a serious squabble arose between him and the government, resulting in his producing two pamphlets, which so exasperated the authorities that by the king's express command he was struck off the list of admirals. He died in 1757, at his seat in Suffolk, and, notwithstanding his disgrace, a handsome monument to him was erected in Westminster abbey. It was Vernon who brought into use the custom of mixing water with the ration of rum, which got the name grog from his habit of wearing a grogam waistcoat, and hence his nickname of "Old Grog." Altogether, the man who invented grog, is buried in Westminster abbey, commemorated by Smollet, and gave a name to Washington's home, must be regarded as no ordinary person.

SAYINGS OF SAM JONES.

Flowers are God's thoughts in bloom.

It is the business of every man to fight evil.

God has not lost his power, but the pulpit has lost its voice.

More lies are told about money than anything else in the world.

Can a man be a Christian if he votes one way and prays another?

When a man knows one thing he will be likely to find out other things.

You need not wait to ask a man to make a profession, for you can tell him by his acts.

I know in the depths of my soul there is something in this world better than money.

I know you denounce drunkenness, but how few pulpits pull out their dagger and stab it.

Truth will not only take care of itself, but it will take care of the man who preaches it.

Whisky is the worst enemy God or man ever had, and the best friend the devil ever had.

Find me the preacher who is built up on divine character, and I will show you a great character.

Though some men may beat me in living aright, no man shall beat me in repenting of my meanness.

It is every preacher's duty to denounce the things of hell just as much as it is to preach of the beauty of Christ.

When a man just lives for what he can get and what clothes he can wear, he is not ten feet from the basement.

It would be as impossible for me to exaggerate the glories of Heaven as to exaggerate the horrors of evil and sin.

There never was a time in the history of the world when the gospel and religion needed so much backbone and nerve as now.

If you will do what Jesus Christ tells you, and don't come out a whole man, then you have got an issue that will bankrupt the Bible.

Every sin that man commits is a direct stab at his conscience, and he stabs and stabs until conscience breathes its last and is dead forever.

A young lady once said to me (her father was a preacher, too): "My father don't believe in revivals." "Well," says I, "there is where your father and the devil are alike."—Boston Herald.

HOW TO GET RID OF RATS.

Says a noted shipmaster, who is thoroughly trustworthy and reliable, and who speaks from actual experience:—

"In the year 1855 I was in comand of the British vessel Tubal Cain, lying along-side the wharf at Melbourne, embarking Chinese passengers for Hong Knog. The docks were so infested with rats that it was impossible to prevent them getting on board, and my vessel was well stocked with them. After being at sea a few days, I mustered the passengers with their effects, on deck, to give them an airing and for the purpose of giving the passenger deck a good cleansing, and sprinkling some chloride of lime mixed with water. I also had a couple of buckets of the same mixture poured down the pumps. This I continued weekly, when, to my surprise, the rats made a raid on the cabin (poop) on deck so that neither myself nor my officers cared about turning in at night.

A happy thought struck me, that the chloride of lime had driven them from below deck. I had everything cleared out of the cabin and storerooms and freely used the mixture. This had the desired effect, the rats taking shelter in every available place outside. This gave us some good sport, especially on a moonlight night, when all hands engaged in hunting rats and driving them overboard, so that by the time we arrived at Hong Kong not one was left on board.

On my return to England, I took a house and furnished it. After being in it a short time I found that it was infested with rats. They would get through every part on the ground floor. On examination, I discovered that a drain ran under the house emptying into the harbor. I here again used the chloride of lime freely, and in less than a week every rat had taken his departure. I have recommended this remedy to many shipmasters and friends on shore, and in all cases it has proved a success. I have occupied my present residence for five years, and we have neither rat nor mouse on the premises. I attribute this to the free use of the above mixture, which is also effective as a deodorizer and disinfectant."

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A man has an eye for beauty in his wife. He notices the soft wave of her hair and fit of her gown with a sort of pleasurable pride, even after time and trials have dimmed the glamour of first love. The successful wife must represent to her husband all the virtues; must be sympathetic, and at the same time sensible. She must be bright, entertaining and agreeable at home as well as abroad, and she must know how to preserve silence when it is desirable to hold her tongue, even though she is ready to burst with indignation. If she does not possess these qualities, let her cultivate them most assiduously. And there is no trait that is such a powerful factor in household harmony as assimilation—to become one in thought and purpose, to have kindred tastes and kindred wishes. The theory of the affinity of opposites was hopelessly exploded long ago. The picture of a petite blonde Desdemona clinging to a swarthy Othello is very pretty, but if Othello's mind is out of tune with Desdemona the affinity cannot exist.—Des Moines Mail.

Too heavy clothing in winter is much criticised by physicians. The Boston climate, with the exception of a few cold waves which require furs and heavy flannels, consists chiefly of thaws in the winter season, when very heavy clothing is injurious. A student of hygiene said recently: "People shut the body up and are afraid to let the air and sunshine get at it. The skin grows torpid and dead scarf-skin forms, locking up the pores just as the ice does a river. What they need is exercise to open the pores, rough rubbing to cut away the dead skin and salt sponge baths to clean the hardened curticle. Follow that system daily and you will find youself less and less sensitive to cold.

In one of the public schools, the other day, while the teacher was instructing the scholars on the folly of intemperance, she commenced by saying that liquor was man's greatest enemy. A young Hibernian fresh from the Emerald Isle, who was listening with much attention, said that we should love our enemies—a statement which the teacher thought was right, but was much perplexed by the witty remark. "But," continued the boy, with a good-natured smile, and relieving the embarrassment of the teacher, "we shouldn't swallow them."—Portland Argus.

An old Irishman occupied the barber's chair the other morning, and he was drowsy. His eyes could not be kept open, and his head tumbled about and dropped over on his shoulder and down upon his breast in a way that made shaving a difficult operation for the knight of the lather, and a dangerous one for the patient. Finally the barber said gently, but firmly, "Look here, sir; I can't possibly shave you unless you hold your head up." To which the response was made with drowsy indifference: "Coot me hair, thin."—Providence Journal.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 11, 1887.

SECRETARY MANNING and family will sail for Europe next Tuesday, for his health, accompanied by Treasurer Jordan.

THE United States Senate unexpectedly confirmed the nomination of Mr. Trotter as register of deeds in the District of Columbia, in spite of the committee's adverse report.

NO LICENSE carried the day grandly in the opening town meetings, Monday. Of the 59 towns which held meetings that day 11 voted in favor of license. This is an auspicious begining. May the other towns in the state do as well, and even better.

THE supreme court of the United States settled a long disputed question Monday by deciding that a state has no right to tax "drummers" from another state. This will put an end to the disagreeable practice of some of the Southern states in this respect.

RHODE ISLAND is small, but progressive. Having adopted a prohibitory amendment to the constitution she now proposes to give the people a chance to vote upon a woman suffrage amendment, and it wouldn't be surprising if this amendment was adopted also.

SOME of the Congregational clergymen of Chicago made a singularly unfortunate exhibition of themselves at a meeting Monday, when a proposition to pass a resolution of condolence to be sent to Mrs. Beecher was met by such an acrimonious wrangle that the resolution was finally withdrawn in very shame.

WHEN so thoroughly competent an official as Mr. Hazen, the third assistant postmaster general, is permitted to resign to make room for a Democratic farmer who never would have been thought of for the position except for his politics, it must be confessed that the administration is giving the country a pretty poor quality of civil service reform.

Do the Republicans in the Massachusetts Legislature propose to quietly ignore the plank in the party's last state convention favoring the submission to the people of a prohibitory constitutional amendent? Don't do it, brethren. This professing one thing and doing another will not always work. If platforms mean anything at all they mean what they say.

RUMORS of big railroad deals are rife this week, though nothing definite is known of the details. A controlling interest in the Baltimore and Ohio road is said to have been sold to a syndicate of capitalists who will soon control through lines from Canada to the Gulf, and from New York to the Pacific. The Boston and Maine is reported to have agreed upon a lease of the Lowell road, and Boston and Albany stock jumped up 16 points to 220 yesterday, the probable basis of the advance being the rumors of consolidation with the New York and New England.

A PLEASANT evidence of the esteem in which Senator Dawes is held by his own townsmen was given at Pittsfield Monday evening, when the citizens, without distinction of party, tendered him a reception at the Academy of Music, and with music, flowers, speeches and a very complimentary series of resolutions, gave earnest proof of the fact that sometimes, at least, a prophet may have great honor even in his own country. It was a spontaneous outburst of neighborly affection and pride, thoroughly deserved, and as creditable to the participants as it was gratifying to the senator.

MORE important measures were passed by Congress in its last session of three months than in its seven months' session of last year. Among the measures of special importance was the bill providing for the presidential succession, the anti-polygamy bill, the interstate commerce law, the Canadian retaliation bill, the restriction of real estate ownership in the territories by aliens, the provisions for the repeal of the trade dollars and the establishment of agricultural experiment stations, and the repeal of the tenure-of-office act. The river and harbor, fortifications, and deficiency appropriations bills failed, and the numerous embarrassments caused by the failure of the last-named bill may possibly be such as to induce the president to call an extra session,—a charming illustration of the folly of having a deficiency bill every year to cover a shortage which should be provided for in the regular appropriations. The signal service is one of the departments which is likely to be crippled in this way.

HENRY WARD BEECHER is dead. The great preacher was not well last Friday, and his illness, which was not considered serious, developed at an early hour Saturday morning into a stroke of apoplexy. He was easily aroused and conversed intelligently during the day, but at night answered questions only by nods, soon sinking into a comatose condition and failing steadily until the end came quietly at 9.30 Tuesday morning. Thus ends the earthly career of America's foremost preacher and one of the greatest pulpit orators of the world. His career is familiar to all. In the forefront of every great reform, his name and fame were familiar throughout the land. This was the 50th year of his marriage and ordination to the ministry, and the 40th year of his pastorate of Plymouth church, the church which he practically created and has sustained for these years. To this church his loss will be well nigh irreparable. Mr. Beecher was in his 74th year. A private funeral service was held at his house yesterday morning, and the body was taken to the church to lie in state until to-morrow morning, when it will be taken to Greenwood.

The West End Land Co. of Boston has acquired a controlling interest in the Metropolitan, South Boston, and Cambridge street railroads, and bids fair to swallow all the horse car lines in the city. The cable and electric motors are likely to be brought into use.

The yachts Coronet and Dauntless will start on a race across the ocean to-morrow if wind and weather are favorable.

A certain physician in town was called to visit a patient just out of the village one day last week, but when he got there found another physician's horse hitched at the door. He immediately vowed he wouldn't mix physic with another M. D., especially one of a different school, and returned home without stopping. The next day he was sent for again, and inquiry revealed the fact that the parson had borrowed the doctor's horse the day before to make a call at that house, and physician number one finally concluded he would take charge of the patient.

PALMER TO HAVE ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

The village is to take one step more forward in this age of progress, and have electric lights. A company was formed Monday night with these officers: President, J. H. Heery; vice president and treasurer, Dr. J. J. Flynn; clerk and secretary, W. W. Leach. The capital is $30,000. The machinery is already purchased, and a place to locate the plant is being looked for. As soon as this is found the work of putting up wires will be begun. For street use the arc light will be used, and the incandescent light for the inside of buildings. It is understood that the Boston and Albany road has agreed to take the light for their station, and enough merchants and others have been secured to take it so that the business will at once start on a paying basis. Electric power can also be furnished if desired. The plan is to put in two large boilers and an engine at the plant, and furnish steam power for some other business, and the company will probably be in working order in a short time.

THE FARMER'S INSTITUTE.

The last of the farmers' institutes, at the Weeks House, Tuesday, drew a large attendance, and proved exceedingly interesting. L. S. Thurston of North Brookfield read a paper on the "Grass Crop," and treated of the different kinds of grass, giving his experience with them. In his opinion timothy and red top were the best grasses for a farmer to use except on shady lands, in which case he considered orchard grass the best. The discussion was participated in by many, and many experinces in reclaiming old meadows and mowing lands given, with different methods of top dressing and the effect of various fertilizers. Sand was favored by many as an absorbent, and its use as a top dressing recommended on mowing land. J. L. Weeks of Hampden told of a one-acre lot which gave him barely a half-ton of poor grass until he plowed it up and worked it over, picked off the stone, after which it gives him two good crops, making about three tons of the best hay. Much of the mowing land might be improved in the same way.

THE MOHAWKS.

The Mohawk Minstrels gave their second annual entertainment at the Park street opera house Tuesday evening to a large audience, and rendered a very good programme, though not equal to the one given last year, there not being quite variety enough in the second part. In the first part there were some good jokes, all new, and some immense local hits which brought down the house, while Geo. W. Ely, in "You cawn't do it, y' know," sang about some Palmer persons and things which every one recognized, and it was a lucky thing for him that he had seven verses. There were also other good duetts and solos, the main trouble being that the artists did not speak loud enough for the audience to hear. W. F. Waite appeared to good advantage as a banjo artist in part second, and had a good original local song, "He gets there all the same." V. H. Woolrich and Geo. W. Ely both did well in character songs, and A. K. Belcher of the Nassowanno House acceptably rendered the "Old Sexton," while Hoyt and Potter did well in "Music on the Brain." The entertainment closed with a performance by the Two Majors, lilliuptian acrobats, which was not very heavy. The net proceeds were $18, owing to heavy expenses.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

The Democratic caucus at the town house last evening drew out a full attendance, and some lively times were witnessed. The Thorndike Democratic Club went in with a determination to beat Kerigan, but Kerigan's friends were out in full force, and carried their point. The committee appointed to bring in a list of officers to be voted on a week from next Monday, made their report and presented a full ticket. Everything was done fair and square, each name being taken up in order, and discussed and acted upon separately by the house. A good deal of feeling was displayed, and the house had to be divided on nearly every ballot. Especially was this shown when Joseph Kerigan's name was proposed for selectman. The yeas and nays were called, the chairman deciding for the former. It was doubted. The house was divided, with the same result; doubted again; a committee was sent to count each side, result still the same, still doubted; the two sides were then made to march past the chair and were counted by a committee of three, after which the anti-Kerigan men were compelled to acknowledge defeat. The officers as finally nominated are: Selectmen—D. F. Holden, Joseph Kerigan, Michael Dillon; assessors—David Knox, John K. Walker, H. C. Strong; school committee—Rev. T. J. Sullivan, William Carroll; constables—James Healey, H. A. Northrop, D. W. Palmer, Morris McCormick, John Shea, H. D. Shaw. A committee of 17 was appointed to fill any vacancies on the ticket, and James Healey of this village made a member of the town committee. The board of selectmen is not as strong a one as might have been put up, and it is doubtful if it can be elected.

DEATH OF MR. AND MRS. W. S. HOWLAND.

The people of this community were saddened to hear of the death by pneumonia, at Auburndale, Saturday evening, of Mary L. Carpenter, wife of W. S. Howland, a missionary of the American Board of Foreign mission, to Madura, India. She was the daughter of Charles Carpenter of this place, and was born February 3d, 1846. She graduated at Monson Academy, and at Mt. Holyoke Seminary in 1870. In 1873 she married Rev. W. S. Howland, son of Rev. W. W. Howland, the veteran missionary, in Ceylon, and for nearly 14 years Mr. and Mrs. Howland have been engaged in missionary work in Madura, returning with three children last summer for a vacation.

Monday evening, 42 hours after the death of his wife, Rev. W. S. Howland passed away, having only been sick with a fever since last Friday, which he brought with him on his return from Montreal the day before. He was the eldest of six children, born in Ceylon in 1846. In 1866 he graduated at Monson Academy, at Amherst College in 1870, and in 1873 at Andover Theological Seminary. In June, 1873, he was married to Mary L. Carpenter of Monson, and sailed for India the following September.

Two children, a girl of 5 and a boy of 12, are still very sick with fever at Auburndale.

The funeral of Rev. W. S. Howland and his wife was held at the Congregational church, Wednesday afternoon, the attendance was large, there being present besides the many relatives and near friends, a large number of towns people, also people from Palmer, Brimfield, Stafford, Hampden and Wilbraham. The services were solemn and impressive, being conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. H. Byington, assisted by Rev. Mr. Chandler of the Madura mission, who spoke of the missionary work of the deceased and his wife, and the loss sustained in the death of his brother in the missionary field. Rev. Mr. Burnham of Springfield, one of the American Board of Foreign missions, eulogized the deceased in fitting words. Rev. Mr. Smith of the Ceylon Mission, a boyhood companion of Mr. Howland and a former student of Monson Academy, who has been in the missionary field near Mr. Howland, spoke feelingly of the sudden severing of ties that bind, and gave interesting reminiscences of the associations with the deceased both in this country and for eign lands.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 9th, 1887.

Inexpedient has been reported by the committee on agriculture on changing the law regarding dog damages for worrying, maiming or killing sheep, fowls or other domestic animals. A like report has been made by the liquor committee on providing state liquor agents to sell liquor for mechanical, chemical or manufacturing purposes in towns which vote no license.

A resolve for county taxes has been reported with the same amounts for the counties as were printed a few weeks ago from the estimates of the county treasurers.

The Legislature observed the annual town meeting day on the first Monday of March by holding no session.

The dentistry bill has been made a special assignment for March 15th.

Without any debate the House has engrossed the bill to exempt the Fitchburg railroad from giving a mortgage on its property to secure the bonds it gives to the state in payment for the Hoosac tunnel.

All day Thursday was devoted by the House to debate on the municipal woman suffrage bill. Able speeches were made on both sides, but so many members wanted to speak that further debate was postponed to March 10th. A great crowd of women was present.

Friday's session was comparatively unimportant in each branch. The Senate received its committee reports, went through its calendar, and, there being nothing further to do, adjourned to Tuesday. With the House the case was different. It had some heavy debatable matters in its calendar, especially the Sunday bill. They did not wish to debate this Friday afternoon, because it has come to be understood that they will not do much Friday anyway. So they adjourned to Tuesday, after an hour's session, leaving the Sunday bill first in the calendar.

It is such tactics as this which delay legislation and prolong the session. Already this House has shown itself the most lax of any for ten years, and, unless it reforms, the session will certainly extend to July 1.

A bill has been reported from the military committee to allow state aid to widows of soldiers, sailors or marines who were married before April 9, 1880. This extends by ten years the limit allowed by the present law. Ought to pass has been reported by the finance committee on the resolve appropriating $20,000 to the soldiers' home in Chelsea.

The first installment of the prospective long debate on the Sunday bill came on Tuesday, and took up the whole afternoon nearly. Different views were presented and the bill was assigned to the first place in the calendar for March 16. Mr. Collison of Boston, author of the local option Sunday bill, tried in a speech of over half an hour to prove that the rights of religious liberty required that every town and city should be allowed to say what Sunday laws it will have, apart from the laws of other places. He put his bill on the grounds of principle and expediency. Mr. Kent of Worcester was in charge of the committee's bill, and he said that while they had recognized the changed conditions of the times from what they were when the Sunday law was enacted, yet they had been governed by the needs of the community, not by the idea of any man's making money, in allowing certain sorts of Sunday work. Some speakers believed that the law should be very liberal, and others wished to have it kept as strict as possible. A wide public interest has been manifested in the matter.

At the meeting of the governor and council on Wednesday the following were appointed state directors of the Fitchburg road under the new consolidation act which has just been passed, and they were confirmed at once under a suspension of the rules: John Quincy Adams of Quincy, David P. Kimball of Boston, and James Renfrew, Jr., of Adams. In appointing Mr. Adams, who used to be the regular Democratic candidate for governor for years, Gov. Ames seems to show that he believes in business methods regardless of politics, or is it only a compliment from the man who is in to the man who tried to get in, but failed?

An important bill was reported to the House on Wednesday from the committee on roads and bridges. It requires every town to elect annually at its regular town meeting a road commissioner who shall have charge of all the roads, bridges, shade trees and sidewalks in the towns, and of sewers and drains, where there is no special department to have charge of them. It is a bill which had long consideration by the committee.

Mr. Taft of Palmer presided all Tuesday afternoon in the absence of Speaker Noyes, and did excellently.

Another important matter for the cities and towns of the state is a bill from the taxation committee, reported Wednesday, to require all tax collectors to keep proper books of account, to be provided at the public expense, in which they shall enter not only the date of payment of every tax bill, but the several items which appear in the bill, such as real estate, personal, poll, state, county, town, abatement, etc. These books must be open to inspection at reasonable times by the public authorities.

A bill from the public charities committee appropriates $25,000 for current expenses for 1887 for the Westboro insane hospital. This is the new homeopathic institution, which is not fairly started yet.

Most of Wednesday afternoon was spent by the House on the resolve in relation to the state printing. It was merely a contest between Wright & Potter, the present state printers, and the Rand Avery company, in which the former won by 127 to 36 and defeated the finance committee.

Secretary Pierce's report on the number of women voting for school committee shows a trifle less than 2000 for 1886, a slight decrease from the previous two years.

The Old Postmaster.

Long years he dwelt behind the latticed wall
Built of glass boxes where he mislaid mail,
With kindly patience answered each call,
And licked the stamps for childhood weak and frail.

Administrations rise and change and fall,
Serene he weathered every shifting gale,
On civil service rules he ran the shop
And never allowed the perquisites to drop.

So in the service he grew old and gray
And oft he put the stamps on upside down;
Missorted letters in a wild, vague way
And sent Smith's letters out to Jones by Brown.

Till special agent Death came by one day
And pouched the old man through to Graveyard town;
He laid quite still, when suddenly he cried,
"Mail closed!" and drew his salary and died.

JESSICA'S SECRET.

Jessica is the brightest tempered woman I know. "Why is it," I asked her the other day, "that one never finds you sulky, or cross, or complaining? What charm have you against the petty ills of life, the small vexations, crosses, disappointments, losses, that must of course lie along your path as well as mine?" I had spoken lightly, but the question brought to my friend's face a tender solemnity, and her words ran in a deeper channel than mine.

"To answer your question," she said, softly, "I must take you into the sanctuary where one's life is 'hid with Christ in God.' It is true that my trials come to me with the sting drawn; and it is because I have come to look upon them as a means of grace. If it be a petty trouble, a disobedient servant, a careless accident, a sour loaf, a rainy day. I say to myself, 'be thankful that you have some discomforts; lift up your eyes, and be reminded that this is not your true home, your eternal rest. Without these pin-pricks, you would be all too likely to forget your pilgrimage state.' If it be a heavier cross—if I am called to meet coldness, indifference, neglect, from those I love, the heart aches, but I say to myself, 'Ah, Jessica, if these fulfilled your every wish, if your loved ones all satisfied your heart's desire, what room would be left for the Friend of friends? Lift up your heart, and rejoice that His love is changeless, free, and knows no end.' And so, before the trial has a chance to spear me, I have laid hold of its weapon, and turned it against some besetting sin of worldliness, pride, selfishness, or vain glory."

This secret of a happy life was not told with glib ease; the hesitating speech, the flushed brow, the averted eyes told plainly that my friend would willingly have kept the curtain down. But I thanked God for the generous frankness which made me a sharer of its blessings.—Congregationalist.

THE SOCIETY OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Six years ago, on the second day of February, the first Society of Christian Endeavor held its first meeting in a private parlor in Portland, Me. A few young people, many of whom had recently given their hearts to Christ, came together and the same constitution, in its essentisl features, which is now adopted by the societies, was presented to these young people, and signed by most of them. In this quietly way, without observation, began this organization, which is now more than one hundred thousand strong, with a rapidly growing constituency in the states and territories, and a foothold in nearly every part of the world. One or two matters are worthy of special notice in connection with this anniversary—one of them is the insufficiency of the human agency connected with this work to account for its growth. No man or any set of men have had much to do with its progresss. Its growth seems to be of God's own ordering, because it meets an universally felt need. Another noticeable feature of the movements have been its flexibility and adaptability to all communities and denominations. It succeeds as well in the country as in the city; in the city as in the country; in the wealthy and cultured churches as in the mission chapel. In some parts of the country it is strongest among the Baptists; in others, among the Presbyterians; and in still others, among the Congregationalists. In every evangelical church where there is a nucleus, however small, of earnest young Christians, there seems to be a field for the Society of Christian Endeavor.—Golden Rule.

Why he didn't come sooner. "I've been ringing the bell fifteen minutes!" he indignantly exclaimed as the elevator boy reached the floor. "And next time I shall have to report you."

"Yes, sir, but please don't. I was trying to fix the cables. All but one are broken, but you rang so long I thought I would come up and take the chances of a drop."

"B-boy! gasped the man as he got out safely on the lower floor, "if I ever ring again and you haven't got but one cable, don't mind me. Just come up stairs and call me an old fool, and I'll have a quarter to slip into your hand!"—Detroit Free Press.

RUSTIC CANDOR.

I like the candor and honesty of the country people. When a lot of men get together in San Francisco to hold a meeting they put on a lot of style, use a lot of words and say nothing with enthusiastic verbiage. The chairman is always careful to be flattering to the speaker he calls upon. "We shall now hear a few remarks from that talented patriot, Mr. Jones." Mr. Jones gets up. Loud applause. He begins: "Mr. Chairman and fellow-citizens: As I stand here and gaze on this assemblage of intellect—I say it advisedly, intellect—[loud applause] I cannot help," etc. But they do that thing very much more honestly in the country. The chairman gets up and says:

"While the committee is out preparing this resolation there's nothing before the meeting, so any of you fellows that wants to can blow off."

In San Francisco when a man does not want to speak he says he's indisposed and would rather be excused. But I like the country way:

"Call Mr. Simpkins," says sombody to the chairman.

"Mr. Simpkins you're called to address the meeting."

"Mr. Simpkins arises without any hesitation.

"Mr. Chairman," he says, "I would be pleased to address this meeting, but I didn't expect to be called upon on this occasion and I left my teeth at home."

Excused.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Cloud Dispelled. Alonzo—"Dearest Edith, candor compels me, on the eve of our wedding, to confess that I am a—"

Edith (in consternation)—"Not a married man?"

Alonzo—"No; but a somnambulist."

Edith—"And is that all, dearest? That should not seperate us. Why, papa was brought up an old-fashioned Methodist and mamma has always been a close-communion Baptist, add they have got along very well together."—Harper's Bazar.

They Arbitrated. An old tramp who had agreed to saw wood for half an hour for his breakfast from a Baltimore woman quit at his seventh stick, and said:

"Madame, I have struck for more breakfast and less wood; are you willing to arbitrate?"

"Certainly," she replied, and she left the case in the hands of her bulldog, who ran the tramp a half a mile and decided that a lockout was inevitable.—Stray.

Latin class, stand up. "Mr. Jellaby, why is dry potato better when cooked than a wet, soggy one?" "Not prepared, sir." "Mr. Jenkins"—"Because its melior," (Jenkins marked 100.) "Mr. Sampson, why does a jucy piece of meat weigh more when roasted than a dry piece?" Mr. S.—"It doesn't sir." "Mr. Jennifer"—"Because, sir, it's gravior." "Correct."

A Georgia minister recently broke his arm while trying to button his shirt. The button must have been sewed on by a left-handed woman, and she got it on the wrong side, of course. But a man in such a predicament seldom breaks an arm. He is more apt to break one of the commandments.—Norristown Herald.

A correspondent in the South sends us this account of a prayer which a lady overheard from the lips of an old darkey in Charleston during the earthquake period: "Do, Lord, come down and help us. Don't send your Son. It's no time to be sendin' de chil'un. Do, dear, Lord, come yourself."—Lowell Courier.

Tommy was taken very sick. His mother discovered that he had been eating too much preserved stuff, and while awaiting the doctor's visit, implored him to tell her the cause of it. "Mother," he said finally, "Mamie Duffy rejected me suit, and" hoarsely, "it drove me to jam."—Tid Bits.

Mr. Fourstar's little girl was there. I must tell you one of her odd little sayings. Her father has a small round bald spot on the top of his head, and kissing him at bed time, she remarked: "Stoop down, papsy dear, I want to kiss the place where the lining shows."—London Truth.

Will Be on Hand—Gentleman—"I am sorry Uncle Rastus, that I can't do anything for you this morning, but charity, you know, begins at home." Uncle Rastus—"All right, Mr. Smif— all right, sah. I'll call round at yo' house 'bout seven dis ebenin', sah."—Harpers Bazar.

"It has been given out that my daughter was married," said a gentleman near Griffin recently, "but I want to state there ain't no truth in it. Such talk as that will keep the young men away. She ain't married at all, but is jest as willin' as ever." Columbus (Ga.) Enterprise.

The Chicago News claims to have received a letter from Charles Egbert Craddock favoring knee-breeches in these words: "I have worn them for a number of years, and am very much pleased with them. Nothing could induce me to wear trousers now."

It is said that when an Ottuma, Iowa man wants coal he goes down to the river bank, where it sticks out, and quarries out a load. The town is built over a coal bed.

"Nothing," says a writer, "gives so much polish as culture." When it comes to a man's boots, however, we prefer blacking. —Burlington Free Press.

"I wouldn't be a fool, if I were you," said Jones to a friend. "If you were me you wouldn't be a fool," was the reply.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Girls that are Wanted.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That fathers and brothers can trust to,
And the little ones understand.

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folk,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do and say,
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are girls of sense,
Whom fashion can never deceive;
Who can follow whatever is pretty,
And dare what is silly to leave.

The girls that are wanted are careful girls,
Who count what a thing will cost;
Who use with a prudent, generous hand,
But see that nothing is lost.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives;
Wanted to cradle in loving arms,
The strongest and frailest of lives.

The clever, the witty, the brilliant girl—
They are very few, understand;
But oh! for the wise loving home girls,
There's a constant and steady demand.

DOROTHY'S ENTERPRISE.

"No," said Dorothy Mallard, "I won't run the farm with any man on shares, I've seen enough of that in father's time. It was always the man that got rich, and father that lost."

"You won't, eh?" said Silas Green, reddening angrily.

"No, I won't," said Dorothy.

"Then I guess you and the children will starve," growled Silas. "Anyhow, I guess nobody will feel sorry for you."

"It's very wall to talk about sympathy and help, and that sort of thing," said Dorothy Mallard. "But when it comes to actual business, I've observed that every man's hand is for himself."

"But no woman ever yet made a farm pay," said Silas Green, sullenly biting the end of a burnt match.

"Well, anyway, I mean to have a try at it," said Dorothy.

She was not quite twenty, this positive young female—a tall, well-made woman, with bright, gray-blue eyes, a healthy red-and-white complexion and very dark brown hair, brushed straight away from her smooth forehead.

She was no city damsel whose ideas of life were limited to six-button gloves, opera matinees and walks on the sunny side of upper Broadway, but a straight-forward, business girl, who knew every detail of farm life, and who could tell just the time when rye ought to go in and carrots come out.

Her father had been "complaining" as the country folks phrased it, for years; and now that he was dead, Dorothy felt a new avalanche of care descended on her. For there were four wishful-eyed little girls and one delicate boy to be provided for.

Silas Green and Dorothy Mallard had never been regularly engaged, but it was an understood thing in the little community that they belonged to each other.

They had "kept company" ever since Dorothy put up her back hair behind with a comb. And Silas had perhaps learned to domineer a little in a good-humored way. Consequently he did not approve of this new outcropping of Dorothy's independence.

"I'd marry her in a minute if she'd hear to my way of doing things," said he. "Of course the little girls are old enough to be bound out. I know plenty of good women who would give them their board and clothes for the work they would be able to do. And as for the little boy, we would not quarrel about him. There is lots of odd chores a boy like him would be useful for."

But Dorothy's eyes had flashed indignation when Silas had hinted some such arrangement.

"Do!" she said bitterly. "Send little Abel to the workhouse. That's the way to manage. And as for the girls, it's a pity we don't live in Singapore or Bombay or some other of them places where they fling the girl babies into the river before they are old enough to be in the way. I wonder, Silas Green, what you take me for?"

So Dorothy gave up all idea of married life, and set herself to work to earn a livelihood out of the old farm.

"It's no use my thinking of wheat and rye, and potatoes, and that sort of thing," said she. "It would require too much capital and too many hands. Besides, father used to say that the market was overstocked. I'll put the big corn lots into tobacco. That's a crop that a woman can handle. Old Jubal will help me about curing for a mere trifle; and I'll put some grape vines up them rocky terraces by the south woods, and the big strawberry field is coming into fine bearing this year. I'm glad I set out the young plants last June and watered 'em all through the draught. And then there's the young chickens. We never did have such a fine lot before. And Polly, and Chatty, and Bess, and Belle are old enough to help a deal; and I know that little Abel can at least weed strawberries and help pick worms off the tobacco-leaves, child though he is. He'll like to think he is helping too. There's a deal of ambition in that lad."

Old Jubal was a rheumatic old colored man who traveled around the country, mending tin ware and re-caning chairs.

His laziness was a proverb through the whole neighborhood; but, nevertheless, Dorothy Mallard contrived to get some good heavy work out of him.

"If dar's anyfing dis chile un'erstan's, it's de car' ob tobacco," said old Jubal. "Doan you fret, Miss Dawthy; I'll guarantee de crop turns out fust best."

And so Jubal took up his residence in the barn chamber, where he smoked himself into semi-stupefaction of an evening, and told ghost stories that made little Abel's flaxen hair stand on end between the pipe-lightings.

"An old man of seventy and a child of seven!" jeered in Silas Green. "We'll see what sort of farming that is."

Dorothy turned short around upon him.

"I believe," said she, with glittering eyes, "that you would be pleased, Silas—yes, actually pleased—if I was to fail in this enterprise of mine."

"Well, I caculate it would teach you a pretty good lesson," said he disagreeably.

But as time went on, the young chickens grew as fat as if they had been in Dorothy's confidence, and were secretly preparing themselves for the gridiron and the spit; the ripening strawberries crimsoned all the field; the young grape shoots stretched their green tendrils sunward, and the tobacco waived its monster leaves as if it fancied itself in old Virginia instead of growing on a rocky Rhode Island farm.

Dorothy Mallard worked early and late. She herself took her crops into town with a borrowed wagon and the old blind pony, which, having been turned out into the world to die by a heartless clam-vender, had been led home and fed on jucy grass by Abel and Chatty, and who actually developed into a sort of Indian Summer of usefullness under the unwonted stimulus of plenty of food and bedding and kind treatment.

And the tobacco field won such renown throughout the neighborhood that a gentleman from Providence—a famous cigar manufacturer—drove up, one afternoon, to look at it.

"Pretty nice 'backer, sah," chuckled old Jubal, who in his ragged working suit, was working in the little plantation, with an occasional pull at a clay pipe.

'A fine crop,' said Mr. Mayhew. 'Your own raising, my man?'

'Me an' Miss Dawthy,' said old Jubal. 'Ef dar's anyfing we un'erstan', 'tis tobacker.'

'What will you take for it,' said Mr. Mayhew, 'as it stands.'

'Mus' ax Miss Dawthy,' said the old man, slowly shaking his head. 'Miss Dawthy am de boss. Ole Jubal dunno nuffin.'

'Where is this Miss Dawthy of yours?'

'She's done took a load of eggs and poultry into town,' said Jubal. 'Massa must wait.'

'Who owns this farm?' Mr. Mayhew asked.

'Miss Dawthy.'

'Who works it?'

'Miss Dawthy.'

'She must be a smart woman,' observed Mr. Mayhew, carelessly.

'Dat she jes' is!' said old Jubal. 'Jes' as smart as de bes' steel-trap in Providence."

Mr. Mayhew naturally prepared himself to behold a raw-boned, elderly female, with a hide and leather complexion, and elbows as sharp as the angle of a Virginia rail fence. His surprise at the appearance of pretty Dorothy Mallard can easily be imagined.

At the end of the season Dorothy balanced her accounts.

'Well,' said Silas Green, who had strolled up in the frosty starlight, with the inevitable burnt match in his mouth, 'how much have you lost?'

'I don't know that it's any of your business,' said she with some spirit.

'I only asked as a friend,' remarked Silas, somewhat discomfited.

'Oh, is that it? I thought it sounded exactly as if you were asking an enemy,' dryly observed Dorothy. 'Well, of course, if that is the case, I don't object to answering. I haven't lost anything.'

'Jest made matters meet, eh?'

'Plus one hundred dollars!' triumphantly responded Dorothy.

'Great Scott!' shouted Silas. 'There ain't many farmers in Glengowe hev made more money than that this year. I suppose it's the tobacco crop.'

'That and other things,' said Dorothy. 'The strawberries have done splendidly, and I could have sold twice as many spring broilers and eggs if I had had them. But I don't deny that the tobacco crop has been very fortunate—very fortunate, indeed!" she added, with a far-away look in her gray-blue eyes.

'I swan to goodness, I'm glad of it!' said Silas Green, with an effort. 'Yes, I be. You've done a'most as well as if you'd been a man, Dorothy. And I don't mind tellin' you I've made up my mind to let bygones be bygones, and marry you after all.'

'Marry me?' said Dorothy.

Silas Green nodded his head benevolently.

'Oh, no; I don't think you will,' said she.

'I've decided to let you take care of the children just as you please," said Silas, "though I still think it would be better to bind them out to trades. For there's no denying that you are a smart girl, Dorothy, and I somehow can't get you out of my head. I—'

'Don't go on, please!' faltered Dorothy, 'I mustn't listen to it, Silas. I am ever so much obliged to you, but I am engaged to another man!'

'Hal-lo!' said Silas.

He took up his hat and went precipitately home.

'I wonder who it can be,' said he to himself. 'There aint a man in Glengowe half good enough for Dorothy Mallard!'

But the next Sunday with the roads covered with the first pearl-white snow of the season, a cutter dashed by him as he plodded along toward the old stone church.

'It's Dorothy!' said he, stopping to stare after it. 'And that's Mr. Mayhew, the cigar manufacturer from Providence that bought in her tobacco crop. I see it all, now!—I—see—it—all!'

As for old Jubal he rejoiced greatly.

'De righteous is always cared for,' said he. "I'se to sweep out de warehouse an' feed de engine fires. I'se always hankered arter a warm place. And I'se to have all de waste chewin' shog I wants. If dar's any better place dan dat, I wishes dey'd jes' let me know.'

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Why do you so strenuously oppose the liquor traffic, was asked the local editor of this paper by a well-known citizen. We replied it was from principle and a variety of reasons we had not time to enumerate. It is now our purpose to state clearly and positively our reasons.

First. The rum traffic costs this country $1,000,000,000 each year. In this estimate no account is taken of the direct cost resulting from the use of liquors.

Add to it the loss to the country in the impaired capacity of labor of rum and beer drinkers.

Add to it the cost of ninety per cent of the courts of police.

Add to it the cost of ever-recurring riots like the famed "Cincinnati riot," which would be impossible without rum.

Add to it the cost of a very large per cent of the expenditures for insane asylums, poor-houses, penitentiaries, houses of correction and reformatories of all kinds.

Add to it the cost of the trials of murderers and of executions, ninety per cent of which is carried to this already enormous account.

Add to it the cost to the country of the rotten political rings, all of which are based upon rum and topped out by it.

Add to it the cost of maintaining the hordes of gamblers, thieves, prostitutes, and in fact the entire criminal class, who are first brought to vice and criminality by rum, and who afterwards depend upon it as their chief stay.

These additions make an array of figures entirely beyond human understanding! and yet, this is only a part of the money account. Vast as this, there are other effects that are far beyond it.

Add to this money loss, the blighting, yearly, of the lives of thousands upon thousands of the best men and women of the country.

Add to it the cold hearth-stones, the shoeless women, the rags, squalor and misery that are inseparable from rum and beer.

Add to it the desolate homes, the heart-broken women, the children reared in ignorance and vice to swell the account of pauperism in this generation and criminality in the next.

Add to it everything that is miserable in life, everything that is destructive of all that is good in man, and some idea may be formed of the relation rum bears to the country. The loss of wealth, enormous as it is, is the best item in the account.

Nevertheless the brewers and saloon-keepers, the ministers to this consuming devil, insist that they have rights in the world. They insist that they shall be permitted to go on seducing the youth and manhood into its embrace without control. They insist that they shall set up their shops wherever they choose, and that they shall be free of restraint or regulation. The promoters of this one great curse claim the right to dictate law to the law makers, to control legislation and to govern the country! They propose to carry elections, to make officers and to govern sober men.

This is why we are opposed to the rum traffic. It is for these reasons we are opposed to its continuation in Greenfield, and we believe every candid, thinking man in this town and county ought to be opposed. The first duty of every lover of his town or county, every friend of humanity in the United States, is to do whatever is possible to pulverize the rum business.—Greenfield Gazette.

HE ONLY WANTED FIVE MINUTES.

"You were speaking of Stephen Field as a grave and sedate justice now that he is full of years and honor and occupies a seat in one of the greatest judicial bodies in the world," said another of the party, "but I remember him when he was as gay and rollicking a lad as the best of us. When the mining camp at what is now Nevada City was first organized, young lawyer Field was elected a justice of the peace. Probably the toughest member of the camp was a noted desperado, Jack Reynolds by name. One day Reynolds was arrested on a charge of horse stealing. It was a trial by jury, with Justice Field presiding. The evidence was not strong enough to convict, but as everybody was anxious to get rid of Reynolds the verdict was: 'We find the prisoner at the bar not guilty, but if he is wise he will leave the camp in thirty minutes.' The verdict amused the young justice immensely, but he repeated it to Reynolds with due solemnity. Reynolds, whose sense of the ridiculous was quite as keen as that of the jury, calmly replied, as he gave his trousers an extra hitch: 'Gents, if the mule don't buck I'll be out in five.'"—From a Washington Letter.

TO DRIVE AWAY HEN LICE.

A correspondent of a foreign exchange says that the only reliable means of ridding the hen-roost and pigeon-loft of vermin is a preparation of sulphur and carbon, technically known as sulphuret-carbon. In France it has been thoroughly tested, and we are assured that it works like a charm. It kills the insects which prey upon pigeons and fowls, without injuring the birds. A bottle containing the solution will last several days, and the cost of it is small. Put two ounces of the sulpheret of carbon in a bottle open at the mouth, and hang it by a string in a hen house. At the end of eight days the bottle should be refilled. The remedy is said to be infallable. If as good as claimed to be, it should be known to every farmer's wife and poultry raiser in the land.

Happy Orphans.

A hundred little chicks or more,
Downy, soft and yellow,
Were peeping out their discontent
In voices far from mellow.
I looked around in wonderment;
No mothers were at hand
To gather 'neath their outstretched wings
The doleful little band.

And, as I gazed, a small wee voice
From one chick seemed to say:
"Perhaps you think we like it—
This fine new-fangled way;
But it's very disagreeable,
For, strange as it may seem,
We never had a mother—
They hatched us out by steam;

"And they call us 'happy orphans,'
When we're ready all to weep,
For no answering cluck comes back to us,
Though we peep, and peep, and peep.
They say it's scientific,
And I've no doubt it's true;
But I'd rather have a mother—
Now, really, wouldn't you?"
—Harper's Young People.

HOW NO LICENSE HAS WORKED IN PITTSFIELD.

Last year Pittsfield voted no license by a large majority, but the selectmen were not in sympathy with this movement, and did little or nothing to execute the law. Still, much was accomplished, as is shown by the following report made at a large temperance meeting a few days hence:—

As the "no-license" vote of last April has been called a complete failure, the following figures and facts are presented for your consideration:

First. The records of the police court from May 1, 1885 to Feb. 9, 1886, show 299 cases of drunkiness; from May 1, 1886, to Feb. 9, 1887, only 196 cases, or 103 less than for corresponding dates last year under the license system. Through May, June and July but few cases were in court; but as the sellers found the law very weakly enforced, they grew bolder and more frequently violated the law; and hence there were more cases of intemperance in there courts during the last few months. All criminal cases in court for same dates in 1885 and 1886 numbered 309, while all cases in 1886 and 1887 were only 146, or less than one-half as many, both being for a period of only nine months.

Second. The records of the jail for the same dates are as follows: All committed numbered 458 a year ago, and this last year only 300, or 158 less men during the last 9 months of '85 and '86. Of the 458 last year committed 203 were for intemperance. Of the 300 thus sent to jail only 91 were on account of intemperance, or 112 less than for the corresponding nine months of the year proceeding.

Third. The records of the Home Work society shows that there have been one-third less calls for aid upon said socity.

Fourth. Facts not in figures: Those employing many workmen affirm that there has been much less intemperance among their workmen than last year. Some of the merchants affirm more sales and better pay from the drinking class; enough to pay all the extra license fees. It is a fact that there have been less fires in town. There has been less disturbance in our streets by day or night, on holidays and fair days. Of the intemperate it may be said that much of their liquor was from surrounding towns where licenses were granted. Of the criminal cases in the upper courts, District Attorney Waterman said, "at the bottom of nine-tenths of them is a rum-puddle."

THE COUNTRY BOY.

The country lad who is trained to simple ways and homely virtues, and who learns what a dollar is worth by actually earning it, under the laws of imperative necessity, has a tremendous advantage over the town boy. The country schools are far inferior to the town or city school, but this is counterbalanced by the fact that the country boy is trained to work from the time he can pick up corn cobs to run the kitchen stove until he goes out to his own home. The country boy has a mile or so to walk to and from school, which gives him a vigorous appetite and health. The country boy or girl is face to face with practical realities. He sees how slowly money is made on the farm; he is taught from youth up the need of economy; he has the nature of saving first explained to him every day in the week; he is not exposed to the temptation of the saloon, or the ball room; he is not tempted so much to be a lady's man before he has occasion to use a razor on his downy cheeks. He may be a trifle rude, he may not feel easy in company, but in the long, closely contested race of life, it is that chap that trudges to school barefooted in summer and in the stogas in winter, whose mother cuts his hair with the sheep shears that leads the chap that goes to the city school with starched shirt front and fancy slippers, and whose head is shaved with a lawn mower in a barber-shop. Such has been our observation, and we think we know what we are talking about. Speaking from experience, we never read any books with such avidity as those we devoured while the horses were resting at the end of the plow land. The boys who were envied forty years ago because they wore cassimere and laughed at our jeans, have dropped so far back in the race that we have almost forgotten them. The chaps who had plenty of money at college, and the city-bred fellows, have not been, as a rule heard from much since; while the country boys, who wore plain clothes and kept close to their books in the old college, are leading the thought in Iowa and other states to-day.

On every road since railway trains to turn their wheels began, at every station you will see a solitary man. His brow is damp with beaded sweat, his heart with woe is cleft. Most earnestly he wants to go, the man that's always left. If the train due at one p. m. should wait till half-past eight, there'd be one man come down to go just thirty minutes late.—R. J. Burdette.

WHAT AN ARMLESS MAN DID.

There recently died at Potsdam, St. Lawrence county, N. Y., Richard Donovan, who was in some respects one of the most remarkable men in northern New York. Twenty years ago, when a boy, Donovan worked in a flour mill. One day he was caught in a belt and received injuries that necessitated taking off both arms at the shoulders. This misfortune did not discourage him, and, after recovering his health, he set about earning his livelihood as best he could without the use of hands or arms. Part of the time he had lived alone, and from the necessity of helping himself he became wonderfully adept in performing all kinds of work, using his feet and mouth principally. He owned a horse, of which he took the entire care, harnessed it, fastened and unfastened the buckles with his teeth, and drove with the reins tied around his shoulders. Being in need of a wagon, he bought wheels and axles and built a box buggy complete and painted it. He went to the barn one winter day and built a cow stable, sawing the timber with his feet, and, with the hammer in one foot and holding the nail with the other, he nailed the boards on as well as most men could with their hands. He dug a well 12 feet deep on a farm in this town and stoned it himself. He could mow away hay by holding the fork under his chin and letting it rest against his shoulder. He would pick up potatoes in the field as fast as a man could dig them. He would dress himself, get his meals, write his letters, and in fact do almost anything that any man with two arms could do.—Boston Transcript.

A FIEND IN DISGUISE.

"I was sitting in my studio the other day," said an artist to a New York Mail reporter, "when a tall, distinguished looking gentleman entered and began talking art to me. He was superbly dressed. His overcoat was lined with fur, and a heavy fur trimming embellished the collar and cuffs of the coat. His silk hat shone brilliantly, and his gloves and boots were unexceptionable. As he continued his talk, he described a number of foreign pictures, and mentioned how magnificently they had been reproduced in etching, photogravures and engraving. In the mean time I did not know what he was driving at, and did not like to ask him. I thought he must be a very wealthy art collector, and began to indulge faint hopes that he had seen some of my work somewhere or other, and come on to give me an order. Merely out of politeness I said that I would like to see some of these reproductions that he praised so highly, whereupon he said that he had some with him which he would show me. I jumped to the conclusion that he had a carriage down stairs. While he was speaking he was slowly unbuttoning his $200 overcoat. Having done so he threw it open, and, inserting his handsomely gloved hand in a pocket which occupied the entire one side of the coat, he pulled into view half a dozen immense art publications. My prince of Russia, my patron of art, was a book canvasser in disguise. Did I give him an order? How could I help it? It was only a dollar a month.

THE BULL FROG'S VICTORY.

One of the best of Sam Small's war stories is this: 'When things were hot around Atlanta Captain Evan Howell received an order to reconnoiter across the Chattahoochee River and ascertain if the Federal troops had retired. The night was black as ink. He read the order to his men, but was surprised to find them all disqualified for the risky job. One couldn't swim, another had rheumatism, still another always took cramps in the water, and so it went down the whole line. But the order had to be obeyed. So Howell plunged into the river and made for the other side. He was a remarkably good swimmer, and felt sure he was making no noise, yet he became so frightened that each stroke seemed to him to arouse the whole Federal camp. Now and then a lightning-bug appeared, and, confident that it was a Yankee musket, he ducked under water. By and by he got so near the shore that he could wade, and he was creeping along as cautiously as possible, his teeth chattering with fear, when of a sudden he struck against an old tree that had fallen into the river. Just then a huge bull-frog gave a sonorous blurt and jumped into the river. Unable to retain his self-possession longer Howell threw up both hands and yelled in terror, 'I surrender, I surrender.' When he finally reached the camp not a Yankee could be seen, but a smouldering fire gave evidence that they had recently decamped.'—Chicago Herald.

IT WAS NOT A DREAM.

I once met a thoughtful scholar who told me that for years he has read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and he said he should have become an infidel but for three things: First, I am a man, I am going somewhere. To-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray of hope or light upon the darkness. They shall not take the only guide and leave me stone blind. Second, I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned upon an unseen arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on the breast of its mother. I know that was not a dream. Third, I have three motherless daughters (and he said this with tears in his eyes). They have no protector but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world if you blot out from it all the teachings of the gospel.—Bishop Whipple.

A German, who had lived at Macon, Ga., for many years without being naturalized, was summoned to serve as juror. On coming into court he objected to serving. 'What is your excuse?' inquired the judge. 'Not civilized,' was the reply.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, 1887.

FAST DAY Thursday, April 7th. So says Gov. Ames.

AN attempt was made to assassinate the czar of Russia last Sunday, a bomb being thrown under his carriage, but it failed to explode.

WITH 2000 convicts in its state prisons, or one to every 130 white voters, California would seem to be pretty good missionary ground.

CHARLES P. CLARK, late president of the New York and New England road, was elected president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad last Saturdas, President Watrous having resigned on account of his health.

SPEAKER CARLISLE, several congressmen and other prominent Democrats were entertained by the Bay State Club at Boston last Saturday. The Democrats are indulging the pleasant delusion that they stand a good chance of carrying Massachusetts in the next national campaign, and are putting forth their best efforts to tone up their organization with this in view.

SENATOR EDMUNDS thinks the Republicans "are sure to nominate a good man" for the presidency next year, and that the party will be restored to power. He considers the Democratic administration a failure; says Cleveland "has been pulled both ways between his civil service reform pledges and the party pressure," and has been betrayed by his party into making more bad appointments than any of his predecessors.

HERE is an instructive illustration of the work which liquor does. A merchant in the city of Howell, Mich., a prominent prohibitionist, recently received the following letter:

SIR: I wish to inform you that you must stop your work in the prohibition cause, or we will burn you out, root and branch. You may prepare for the worst, as we are on your track.
MANY SALOON KEEPERS.

Last Saturday night his store was found to be on fire, and several business blocks were destroyed before the flames could be extinguished.

NOT a trace of black was to be seen in the decorations of Plymouth church at the funeral of Henry Ward Beecher, the beloved pastor's feelings in this particular being scrupulously regarded, but the flowers which he loved so well were displayed in the greatest profusion. And what could be more fitting, when one has passed from the labor and trials of earth to the glorious reward of the redeemed? There is talk already of a monument to Mr. Beecher in Brooklyn, to be reared by popular subscription. His will has been probated. It makes his sons executors. His life insurance of $100,000 is to be invested for the benefit of his wife, and the rest of his property goes to his children.

ANOTHER RAILROAD HORROR.

One of the most terrible railroad accidents ever known in Massachusetts occurred on the Dedham branch of the Boston and Providence Railroad a little after 7 o'clock Monday morning, at the Bussey bridge, midway between Roslindale and Forrest Hills station, and only five miles out of Boston. The 7 o'clock local train from Dedham left that station with nine passenger coaches and a baggage car. The cars were well filled with persons going to their work in the city. The engine and three cars passed safely over the bridge, when there was a tremor, and the bridge went down, dragging the six following cars with it to the street, some 30 feet below. The bridge was an iron girded one, 120 feet long, the tracks passing over the top. The appearance of the wreck was sickening in the extreme. The rear car, which was the smoker, was tipped completely over on its top. The next car was tipped partly over, and was made a complete wreck. The third car lay flat on its bottom, with the roof and floor crushed like a closed accordeon. The fourth car was stretched at right angles across the street, with its top torn completely off. The fifth car was the worst wrecked on the train, and it was in this car that probably the greatest loss of life and limb resulted. It fell from the track close to the side of the street and parallel with it. Its roof and sides were crushed into kindling wood. This was the only car that took fire, but by the prompt response of the fire department the flames were quickly extinguished, and this added horror was averted. The sixth car crossed the bridge, but was thrown from the track close to the embankment, and one of its sides was completely torn away and its roof crushed in. The seventh car was also thrown from the track and badly wrecked. The eighth and ninth cars, the baggage car and engine kept the track. Engineer Walter White showed creditable presence of mind. He felt the jolting of the train, and, glancing behind, saw at once the terrible accident. He immediately put his engine at full speed, and, blowing his whistle, dashed for the Forest Hills station, where he gave the alarm.

Twenty-five of the passengers were killed outright or died soon after, and over 100 were injured, many of them seriously, and some fatally.

The scenes were horrible in the extreme. The passengers were largely composed of women and girls. In one place the bodies of seven women were taken out in a row. All were horribly mangled. One woman was cut completely in two, the upper half of her body only being found. A pathetic sight was that of two girls with arms around one another, clinging in the embrace of death. Both had been killed by blows upon the head. In many instances axes and crow bars were necessary in order to free the people who were pinioned in the wreck. In two cases it was necessary to cut the bodies in order to get them out. They were already crushed out of any semblance to human shape, and were so tightly wedged in that they could be removed in no other way. One of the most terrible scenes was that presented to those who first hurried to the street under the bridge. The headless trunk of a woman was found lying across a timber, with one arm completely gone and the lower limbs all cut and mangled. The head was found among the tangled iron and fragments of a car a few feet away. One man was seen to walk from the wreck in the direction of Roslindale. When about a dozen yards from the wreck he fell dead, either from excitement or internal injuries.

The railroad commissioners are investigating the accident and its causes. It is the general impression that the bridge was at fault, and the Engineering News of New York, which has made a thorough examination of it, says that "more shamefully bad specimens of bridge design, metal and wormanship can hardly exist." The railroad officials of course claim that the bridge was first-class in every respect, but the fact that cars were heated by stoves in the middle of each car shows that the managers are decidedly behind the times in this thing, at least, and are quite likely to be in their idea of bridges.

There is a good deal of rivalry between the merchants of the town when a new family moves into the place, as to which shall secure the customer. Peck of Providence, L. B. Parkhurst of Northampton, O. W. Roberts of Ware and J. H. Carmichael of Springfield.

THE PASSAGEWAY HEARING.

The railroad committee of the Legislature came to Palmer last Friday afternoon to look over the approaches to the union station, and give a hearing on the petition for legislation obliging the Boston and Albany road to make an approach which will better accommodate its patrons. Besides the committee there were several other members of the Legislature along, and Representative Taft gave them an object lesson on the subject by taking them over the fence to the Converse House, where they dined. After dinner and a view of the railroad station and the various ways of getting there the committee repaired to the district court room, which was filled with interested citizens. Representative Taft opened the case in behalf of the petitioners and the people of his district, H. C. Strong spoke for the Main street property owners, and Ebenezer Brown, John M. Converse, and Agent W. C. Greene of the Thorndike Co., testified to the inconvenience of the present approach. J. S. Loomis put in a word against a grade crossing, and E. J. Wood argued in favor of an approach at the foot of Central street. C. L. Gardner spoke in behalf of the committee appointed by the town to secure a better approach, and an opportunity was then given for anybody to speak on the other side, but nobody appeared. The evidence was entirely cumulative, and showed conclusively that as matters now stand the railroad station is exceedingly non-get-at-a-ble, greatly inconveniencing not only the majority of the people in this village, but those from the other villages in the town, as well as persons coming in from adjoining towns, and it is hoped that the committee were so favorably impressed with this fact that they will devise some means of relief. In consequence of a misunderstanding the railroad was not represented at the hearing, and it was accordingly adjourned to yesterday forenoon at the state house, to give the corporation a chance to present its side of the case, at which time they snowed plans for a Commercial street passageway, at an estimated cost of $7700, and talked as though they wished to make an immediate move in the matter, not caring to have it go before the Legislature.

SOME TOWN FIGURES.

The report of the selectmen and other town officers will be issued from the JOURNAL job rooms to-morrow, from which are taken the following facts and figures: The total valuation of the town is $2,581,113, the real estate being $1,749,695, and the personal estate $831,418. The amount on the tax collector's book was $34,696.07, of which $2689.83 remains uncollected. A balance of $569.95 of the taxes of 1885 is also uncollected. The treasurer's report shows the total receipts to have been $46,251.90, and the expenditures $44,409.39, leaving a balance of $1842.51 in the treasury. The soldiers' monument fund on deposit in the Palmer Savings Bank is $5426.49. The overseers of the poor announce that the town farm and buildings are in excellent condition. The house has been crowded to its utmost capacity, necessitating the supporting of many poor outside. The number of tramps cared for during the year ending March 1st was 255. The selectmen report all the bridges of the town in good condition, but complain that the small appropriation for roads would not allow them to do more than keep highways passable. They advise raising the road and putting in culverts at both the Fay and Hastings bridges. The school committee report that good results are being obtained, but lament the lack of sufficient room for the high school. A list of the appropriations and amounts expended follows:

TOWN MATTERS.

Vote "No."

Look out for split tickets.

"Get the best" for town officers.

Don't stay at home on account of the traveling.

Perhaps the ladies will distribute "No" ballots, as well as coffee. Why not?

Every voter in town, able to be out, ought to be at the town house next Monday.

If the temperance voters will only keep awake next Monday they can easily carry the town for no license.

At the prohibitory caucus last evening H. E. W. Clark, F. A. Packard and M. J. Dillon were nominated for selectmen.

Palmer ought to join in the no-license movement which is sweeping over the state this year, and will, we believe, if the voters will do their duty and go to the polls next Monday.

Action on the appropriations and other business matters of importance will doubtless be put over to an adjourned meeting, as has been done with good results for a few years past.

A "No" vote is for the purity and happiness of home, the good order and prosperity of the community. A "Yes" vote means drunkenness, misery, sorrow and crime. Which is the better?

There would seem to be no good reason for longer delaying the erection of a soldiers' memorial and library building. The offer of a valuable lot for this purpose, and the desire of the Grand Army boys for a building, bring the matter before the town for action, which ought to be favorable.

The town ought to make sure of the re-election of Constable J. A. Palmer. He is one of the most efficient officers the town has ever had, and the fact that the liquor interests are opposed to him is a strong testimonial to his efficiency and fearless discharge of duty. The town needs just that kind of an officer.

The Prohibitionists have done a good thing in nominating Mrs. Proctor of Bondsville as a member of the school committee, and as Mr. Buell of Three Rivers positively declines to run, the Republicans will do well to turn in and help elect Mrs. Proctor, who is a very capable woman of broad ideas and good education.

A good town history is something for every town to be proud of, and it is time that Palmer had one. E. B. Gates, one of the historical committee, has done an immense amount of invaluable preparatory work, in compiling genealogies, etc., and matters are now in excellent shape for the preparation of a history which will be useful and valuable.

The registrars of voters have added a good many names to the list in the past two weeks, and a strong effort will be made to carry the town for license next Monday. The no license element is hard at work also, and will run teams from all the villages to bring out votes. The ladies of the Women's Christian Temperance Union will serve hot coffee and doughnuts at the town hall.

"You can't stop the sale of liquor. Therefore make them pay well for the privilege of selling it, restricting the sale in this way, and enriching the town treasury with the fees." That is a favorite argument with the advocates of license. But if the logic is good there, it is equally good in other cases. If it is a good thing to license liquor selling it is equally good to license gambling, prostitution, and other evils. A few thieves might also be licensed in every community. These things cannot be stopped by prohibitory laws, so license them, and turn a portion of their ill-gotton gains into the public treasury. What sort of a community would we have if this were done? And why license the one evil which causes three-fourths of all the crime and misery in the world?

The Republicans held their caucus for the nomination of town officers Wednesday evening, and drew out about 75 voters. Dr. William Holbrook was made moderator, and H. B. Fullerton of Thorndike, secretary. A committee of five was appointed to present a ticket to the caucus, and returned H. E. W. Clark, J. O. Hamilton and J. S. Holden. Mr. Holden positively declined to run, and the name of D. F. Holden was voted down by the house. F. A. Packard's name was then proposed and accepted. This is the full ticket nominated: Selectmen, H. E. W. Clark, James O. Hamilton, and F. A. Packard; assessors, David Knox, Jerre Dutton and T. D. Potter; school committee, Rev. T. J. Sullivan, George E. Buell; clerk, James B. Shaw; constables, J. A. Palmer, Fred Allen, M. Dawson, Geo. Kenyon, E. L. Derby, E. E. Ryther, D. W. Palmer, C. E. Shumway and E. W. Potter; fence-viewers, E. B. Gates, H. C. Smith and Roswell Hastings.

The farm of the late Asahel Bennett, in the eastern part of the town, will be sold at auction Friday, at 1 o'clock p. m.

PALMER CENTER.

Mrs. Burpee is at home with a broken finger.

Francis Miller is very low at his home on the Warren road, having been confined to the house for the last three months with rheumatism. It is not expected that he can recover.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The graded school in district No. 5 will commence next Monday.

Owen Hammond had his fingers crushed at the paper mill last Friday.

The "Crazy Tea" which was given in Grace chapel Tuesday evening was a very successful affair. Eight masked lunatics presided at the tables, and the service was quite unique. The pickles were served on sugar bowls, the sugar on pickle dishes, and everything else in a like manner, from baked beans on sauce dishes to cake and biscuits on dust pans. Miss Janie Savage's dramatic recitals were certainly a rare treat, and are considered the best ever heard in this place. The society will realize about $25 from both entertainments.

An accident which came near being a serious one happened at A. O. Thresher's coal kiln, Monday. He, with the help of Nelson Carew, placed the heavy iron door in position, braced and mortared it, when the gas forced it out, throwing Mr. Carew down and bruising him, while Mr. Thresher was caught by the head between the door and the timber that braced it. Though bruised and bleeding they soon replaced it and saved the kiln. The blood flowed freely, but a little time and a good deal of court-plaster will repair the damage.

The fairy operetta last night was a great success. Everything moved smoothly, the children's chorus showed remarkable training, and all their work was done with life and correctness. Mr. Molloy improved his make up and business, and scored quite a hit; Misses Loftus, Riley and Moynihan as the fairy queens left nothing to be desired, costumes, action and voice all seemed at their best; Stella's little yarn of Sirius, her fatherland, was told with a merry twinkle that caught the large and appreciative audience at once; the gnomes in their horned caps were weird, and one of them displayed remarkable pantomimic ability; Miss Mamie Thompson's "Dear Little Shamrock" was well rendered and secured an encore; also the "Starlight" duet of Miss Loftus and Mr. Luman; the banner song went with dash and struck the popular chord; the tableau—Ireland and America United—aroused great enthusiasm. A dance followed, with music by the Thorndike orchestra.

The new and elegant quarters will naturally bring an increased attendance. All who enter the new academy are surprised to find it finished so well, and all things so well arranged.

The prohibition caucus, Monday evening, did not draw out a very large number of voters, and no candidates were nominated, it being voted to support the candidates of the other parties, provided they are temperance men, and to enforce the law. In order to provide for all emergencies a committee of nine was appointed, who are to have everything ready before town meeting. It was also resolved to have an article inserted in the town warrant asking that the use of Memorial hall be given free for all agricultural, educational and temperance purposes.

MAY HAVE BEEN POISONED.

A good deal of interest has been awakened among Monson people by the report that the death of Rev. W. S. Howland and wife, noted in these columns last week, may have been caused by poisoning. It seems that while on his way home from Canada Mr. Howland purchased a quantity of candy, eating freely of it himself and giving some of it to his wife and two children. The two children who ate of the candy are dangerously ill, while the one who did not get any of it is as well as ever. Symptoms of poisoning were noticed in the sickness of Rev. Mr. Howland and wife, and the candy is believed to have been the cause of it. What remains is being analyzed by a Harvard professor.

REV. E. H. BYINGTON RESIGNS.

The pulpit of the Congregational church was occupied by Rev. Mr. Woodruff of the American Board of Missions last Sunday, who after the discourse of the morning read the pastor's resignation:

To the First Congregational Church and to the First Parish in Monson:

BRETHREN AND FRIENDS: About seven years ago you called me to become your pastor. We sought divine direction, and we thought that we were providentially guided in forming the relation which has existed so long. The same Providence now seems to indicate that the time has come for a change in the pastorate.

During these years we have labored together with unusual harmony among ourselves, and with a good degree of the favor of God. No one can be more sensible than I am of the imperfections in my ministry, but your kindness has made the necessary allowance for my deficiencies. We have rejoiced together in our prosperity, and we have shared each other's burdens and sorrows. Death has come to many of your families, as it has come to the family of the pastor. There have been many seasons of joy also, not only in our homes, but in our church. God has crowned our united labors with his blessing, and we have seen the steady growth of our church and congregation from year to year. There have been seasons of spiritual quickening. Many of the children of the church have been led to Christ, and we now have a larger proportion of young people among our communicants than is common. The young people have been organized and trained in their various associations. They are very useful in our Sabbath school, and in all the work of our church. Our Sabbath school itself has made progress in its methods. The benevolent contributions of our people have increased from year to year. The social religious meetings have been well sustained, and have been a help to those who attend them.

Our society has also been prosperous in its financial affairs. The expenses of public worship have been promptly met, and such improvements as were needed have been made. I am told that the treasury of this year is unusually prosperous. Indeed I have never seen our congregation in so good condition for Christian work, and with so much reason to expect spiritual growth and enlargement as it was last autumn after my return from Europe.

Coming to the reasons for my resignation I need only refer to the unfortunate events of the past four months, which have interrupted the harmony of our people and dissipated the hopes of a quickened religious interest during the winter. As the difficulty related so directly to myself, it was impossible for me to deal with it as I could easily have done if it had related to another. The only thing I could do was to insist upon an investigation of the charges which impeached my own truthfulness and honor. I proposed in the first instance a personal conference with my accusers for the purpose of correcting misunderstandings. As this was not granted I next proposed to leave the whole matter to three referees mutually chosen. This was refused. In this state of the case I asked the standing committee of our church to join me in bringing the matter before men whose character would give weight to their decision, and in inviting all parties to appear before them. This proposal the church committee accepted, and we all agreed upon seven men of good report among the churches, ministers and laymen well known in the state. We also invited those who were responsible for the charges to appear and present their case. The investigation was very careful and thorough. The result to which these gentlemen all agreed has already been published to the world, and an autograph copy is on file with the clerk of the church. This result, as you know, was a vindication of my character from all the charges which have been made upon it. In order that this result might have the weight which belonged to it, I thought it right to wait long enough to give time for any review of the investigation or any appeal to any other tribunal which the other parties might desire to make. So much time has now passed that it is fair to conclude that they do not wish for any further investigation, and I am now free to take such action as seems to be best.

I am fully convinced that, after the excitement that has attended the discussion of these matters among our people, I should not be able to go on with my ministry here with a united people, and without such union I am quite unwilling to go on. I miss a few from our congregation, and there are a few others whose co-operation is doubtful. The only question for a pastor in such a case is the question of usefulness. My judgment is that it is better for the church to seek another minister, and better for me to be free to accept another field of labor.

I therefore hereby tender the resignation of my pastoral office, this resignation to take effect the first Sabbath in May next ensuing, and I request you to join me in calling an ecclesiastical council to review our proceedings, and, if thought proper, to dissolve the relation between us.

I hardly need to say that I do this with entire good-will toward our church and people, and to assure you all that I shall always desire and pray for your spiritual prosperity. Yours in Christian bonds, E. H. BYINGTON.

Monson, Mass., March 12, 1887.

A CARD.

The undersigned wishes hereby to express her grateful acknowledgments for herself and family to her friends and neighbors for their patient and kindly aid during the illness of her husband, George Holdsworth. She also desires to thank the railroad employes for their gift indicating esteem for a fellow workman. To the Womans' Relief Corps and to L. L. Merrick post, G. A. R., she feels particularly grateful for kind offices performed and fraternal gifts bestowed in memory of a fallen comrade.

MRS. GEO. HOLDSWORTH AND FAMILY.

PALMER, March 17, 1887.

By a purchase of Lyman street real estate in Springfield this week the Boston and Albany Railroad has acquired the ownership of all the real estate between that street and its tracks, from Main to Chestnut street, with the exception of the Agawam bank block. This plainly means a new station east of Main street.

PROHIBITION sentiment is developing unexpected strength in many parts of the country. The Tennessee Legislature has passed a bill submitting a prohibitory constitutional amendment to the people, and the Illinois Legislature is likely to do the same thing. Massachusetts ought not to be content with a rear position in the procession of states which are wheeling into the prohibitory column. The Old Bay State has ever been a leader in matters of moral reform, and our Legislature should give the people an early chance to express their will on this question.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 9th, 1887.

BOSTON, March 16th, 1887.

Gov. Ames sent to the Senate, Thursday, a message which will help him with the temperance people, and will not hurt him with any one except the persons aimed at. In consequence of the court decision that the laws to prevent fraudulent voting do not apply to voting on the issue of liquor licenses, he urges the passage of a law to protect the purity of the ballot in that respect as truly as in every other. He is emphatic in his position that the license votes should be fairly cast and honestly counted. Another matter grows out of the recent Cambridge strikes and the refusal of some liquor dealers to obey the order of the mayor to close their saloons when there was great public excitement. He recommends a law to give local authorities power to close saloons at such times.

The House had its woman suffrage debate Thursday, and the bill was rejected by a vote of 61 yeas to 97 nays and 25 pairs. Last year the House voted 59 yeas to 114 nays. The whole afternoon of Thursday was occupied by debate and roll call till after four o'clock, and no further business was done. The House does not yet seem to appreciate the value of time. But it will in June, if it does not sit into July.

Three important measures, at least, were in the House on Friday. One was a bill to provide uniform meal hours in factories and workshops, for children, young persons and women, except in these establishments: Iron, glass, paper, letter-presses, prints, bleaching and dyeing. Authority is given to the governor to make further exceptions at his discretion, and the penalty for violating the act is a fine of from $50 to $100.

The second was a bill to allow all women who are qualified to vote for school committee to vote on the issue of liquor licenses. It came from the woman suffrage committee, and there was only one dissenting member—Senator Slattery of Middlesex.

The third was the water question, involved in the bills in favor of New Bedford and Ayer. The same issue was at stake as in last year's Fall River bill, which the House passed by a large vote over Gov. Robinson's veto, whether the owners of mill privileges have a right to the water of the stream or pond as against the people who wish to use it for domestic purposes. By a very large vote the House decided the case against the mill owners, and the question appears settled for the present.

At the session of the Legislature on Monday there were present for a few minutes Congressmen Springer of Illinois and Wilson of West Virginia, who had stayed over from the Democratic dinner of the Bay State Club, Saturday. A few Democratic members were presented to them on the floor.

A bill has been reported from the labor committee to prevent any children under 14 years from cleaning any factory machinery while in motion, or any machinery near other machinery which is in motion, under penalty of a fine of from $50 to $100. The committee reported inexpedient to allow an extra half hour on Saturday for cleaning machinery.

In order to give all members a chance to be present, the debate on the bill to allow women to vote on the issue of liquor licenses has been postponed to March 24.

A report has been received from the commissioners to fix the boundary line between this state and New Hampshire, that they are making progress, and that they are locating the original line, which was intended to be three miles north of the Merrimac river, and parallel with it.

The bills in relation to contagious cattle diseases and to prevent giving false pedigrees of cattle, have both been tabled, and will both be contested.

There was reported to the House on Tuesday, from the liquor committee (with the dissent of Senator Alger of Middlesex, and Representatives Atwood of Boston and Felch of Newburyport), a bill to limit liquor licenses, except druggists, to one in 50 of the population, and any licenses issued in excess of that number are to be void

A bill came into the House from the labor committee to provide proper meal hours for children, young people and women in factories. It prohibits more than 5½ hours of continuous work by such persons, without three quarters of an hour for meals, but allows them to work not over 6½ hours if that does not make them later than one o'clock p. m., and they are then dismissed for the remainder of the day.

On Tuesday afternoon the debate on the state printing contract was ended after a protracted and sharp contest between the present state printers and the Rand Avery company, which formerly held the contract. As it is left the "lowest responsible bidder" clause is omitted, and the state trusts to the good sense of the persons who are to award the contract.

An employers' liability bill was reported in the Senate, Tuesday. It applies to all employes, except domestic servants and farm laborers, and embraces all corporations, including railroads.

Wednesday was a day of important matters in each branch. In the Senate a report was made on the revision of the judiciary of the State, Senators Hartwell and Forbes of Worcester, and Clark of Hampshire, dissenting. The report was made by Senator Reed of Bristol, and recommends, to stop the inefficiency of the minor courts, that all commissions of justices of police, municipal and district courts, shall run but seven years, and a constitutional amendment is offered to that effect.

The governor and council heard on Wednesday the case of Charles A. Freeman, the Pocasset child slayer, and at the close of the hearing, adopted an order discharging him from the Danvers insane hospital on the ground that it can be done without danger to others.

Most of the afternoon Wednesday, in the House, was devoted to debate on the Sunday bill. By a large vote the local option bill was rejected, and then the bill of Mr. Wharton of Boston, which was like the committee's bill in most respects, was ordered to a third reading. Amendments will be offered at the next stage. LANDON.

The poet has said that in the spring a young man's fancy turns to love. It is equally true that a young woman's fancy turns to a new bonnet. Forbes & Wallace have their millinery opening at Springfield March 31 and April 1st.

We have before stated through these columns that ladies' fine French kid button boots could be bought of Broadhurst Bros. (Morse's shoe store), Main street, Springfield, for $3.50 a pair. They have an old ladies' easy button boot called the "Home Comfort" which sells for $2 25, and sells like "wild fire."

When D. H. Brigham & Co., the well and favorably known Springfield clothier and furriers, undertake to do a thing they do it, regardless of the loss, as will be seen by their advertisement on another page. Ladies will be specially interested in this the last and most important sale of the season, as well as all others who desire to invest in clothing, fur robes or blankets, as it will pay to buy and hold these "standard goods" if not wanted for use this season.

Abraham Hare, druggist, Beilville, Ohio, affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years' experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle. The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

REGISTERED AND COUPON WATER WORKS TRUST BONDS

OF THE

NATIONAL WATER WORKS INVESTMENT COMPANY,

NEW YORK.

Capital, $500,000.

Secured by the pledge of Six Per Cent Water Bonds deposited with the Farmer's Loan & Trust Co.

DIRECTORS.

George F. Baker, President First National bank, New York.

C. C. Pomeroy, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.

E. W. Clark, of Messrs. E. W. Clark & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

H. C. Fahnestock, Vice-President First National bank, New York.

F. M. Colston, of Messrs. Wilson, Colston & Co., Baltimore, Md.

Theodore C. Woodbury, of Messrs. Woodbury & Moulton, Portland, Me.

Archer N. Martin, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.

These bonds, the direct obligation of the National Water Works Investment Company, have the following advantages to investors:

First—As security, a direct charge against the capital of The National Water Works Investment company, amounting to $500,000.

Second—The benefit of the trained talent, experience and judgment of the experts employed by The National Water Works Investment company and the business judgment of its Directors.

Third—Constantly-increasing security. The municipalities, either directly or otherwise, make such contracts with the water-works companies as to give them practically the exclusive right to supply water. Every increase in the population increases the demand for water, and the consequent revenue of the company; as the city grows, therefore, the revenue of the water company and the security of these bonds correspondingly increase.

Fourth—The company sees that, as greater security to the bonds which it purchases, assignments are made by the local water company directly to a trust company of the revenue delivered from the city for fire protection, etc., for the benefit of the bondholders, so that the investor will have the further security of the municipal obligations in addition to that of the local company and that of The National Water Works Investment company.

These bonds will, therefore, combine the advantages of Municipal Obligation. Direct Obligation of The Local Water Works company and the Absolute Obligation of The National Water Works Investment company.

It is believed that these securities are an absolutely safe investment, based on an element vital to the existence of every community, secured by most stringent provisions for the protection of the investor, and having the additional advantages of ready convertibility.

These bonds are for sale in denominations of $1000, $500 and $100, by

A VALUABLE EXPERIMENT.

Mr. Geo. W. Sherman, of Rhode Island, gives the following experiment: Planted 5 acres of potatoes, applying 1,000 lbs. Stockbridge to the acre. From 2 acres Blush potatoes I sold 610 bushels; from 1 acre Early Rose, 160 bushels; from 1 acre Burbank, 210 bushels; from 1 acre Pearl Savoy, 127 bushels. No other manure used. I also planted 6 acres of corn with 800 lbs. Stockbridge to the acre, and harvested 780 bushels of ears and fed green about ¾ of an acre. I cannot raise potatoes free from scab with stable manure. SEVEN THIN EARS.

A friend from N. H. writes: "One row without the Hill & Drill Phosphate looked like the seven thin ears of Pharaoh's dream that were blasted with the east wind. The rest of the piece, where the Hill & Drill was used, resembled the seven rank and full ears, with thrifty stalks that would make one think of the cedars of Lebanon." BOWKER FERTILIZER CO.

A Warning.

Mr. Zerubbabel Smyth De Klyn
Resolved he would write a valentine
To a maiden he thought both fair and fine.

"I'll write it in flowing verse," quoth he;
"Her heart is like ice, but 'twill melt for me,
When I vow that I write on my bended knee."

He took paper and ink and a new stub pen,
And to quicken his fancy he counted ten,
While he made a few flourishes now and then.

He rolled up his eyes and wrote, "Evermore;"
Arose and said, as he walked the floor,
"Methinks that with motion my mind will soar."

Then he thought, "To excitement I seem inclined;
I'd better sit down to calm my mind,"
And he whistled for thought as do sailors for wind.

He patted his brow and he petted his chin,
With a pensive smile that resembled a grin;
He was sure that now he'd begun to begin.

He heaved a sigh and scribbled, "My lass;"
Then mournfully went to watch in the glass
His feelings over his features pass.

He could hear the rat-tat-tat of his heart,
And almost the thoughts he wished to impart.
"If I only," said he, "could get a good start!"

For inspiration he tore his hair
And gazed at the ceiling, but naught was there.
He groaned, "Can this calm be the calm of despair?"

Thus he wore the hours of the night away,
But he wrote not a line for Saint Valentine's day—
For, you see,—he had nothing at all to say.

To the maiden he thought so fair and fine,
The post brought many a valentine,
But never a word from Z. S. DeKlyn.

—Anna M. Pratt in St. Nicholas for February.

AN OLD MAID'S SOLILOQUY.

What have I done to-day? Well, let me see. First I offended Miss Smith when she came over to git my rule for makin' cream toast. I'm a master hand at that—makin' cream toast, I mean, not offendin' people—if I do say it.

Says I, 'Who be you a goin' to make cream toast for?' Says she, 'For my husband. You know his appetite is kinder delicate, an' he can't eat such hearty food's he can when he is well.'

'Says I. Miss Smith, I think a woman of your years oughter to use more judgment than to pamper a man like that. I don't believe Hezekiah Smith needs cream toast no mor'n I do, an' you're just a slavin' yourself to death for him. He hain't got consumption no mor'n my cat; an' if he has, you're just a flyin' in the face o' Providence by prolongin' his life.'

She colored up awfully an' started for the door. Says I, 'Don't be in a hurry an' as soon as I finish cuttin' out these bows for my new dress I'll get the receipt for you.'

Says she, coldly, 'I guess I won't trouble you,' an' off she went. I know she's mad, for she won't stan' nothing. Real fiery. 'Senstive, some people call her, but I wouldn't give shucks for a body that can't stan' a little plain talk from a friend.

Well, after she'd gone I sot there a workin' and a thinkin' an' as I felt sort o' lonesome sometimes. This livin' all alone ain't what its cracked up to be.

I put on a clean collar, for I thought if Miss Brown urged me real hard I'd stay to dinner, for it would save heatin' up my house, an' it was a pretty hot day. Besides, they always have somethin' good for dinner, an' I don't like workin' in warm weather. 'Let them that has to,' say I. They always was extravagant at the Brown's anyway, an' are forever a talkin' about stingy people every time I go there.

Well, I went roun' to the porch door, for I knew they'd all be in the kitchen to work so early in the mornin', an' I didn't stop to knock. Says I, 'Good mornin' to you all,' an' I went an' took off my sunbonnit an' sot down.

Sally, the youngest gal, was a bakin' an' fussin' roun' an' Molly was cleanin' vegetables for dinner. Says I, 'Where's your ma, girls?'

Sally spoke up kinder quick like an' says she, 'She's gone over to Miss Smith's. The doctor says Hezekiah is a failin' rapidly an' ma has gone over to take him some jelly an' wine; an' she's goin' to stay all day an' help Miss Smith who's nearly worn out.'

Pretty soon says I, 'Where's your pa?' Says Molly, 'He has gone to town.'

'Has he? It seems to me he goes pretty often. I don't never like to see a man spendin' so much time runnin' round.

'My father went to attend to some business," spoke up Sally, pert-like.

'Oh,' says I, 'I wonder when he's comin' back.' No one replied, so I said, 'Do you know Molly?' 'No, he didn't say.'

'He'll be back to dinner, won't he?' says I, for I thought if he wan't I wouldn't git any tea, for he's so powerful fond of it they make it three times a day when he's ter home.

'They do say if 'twan't for drinkin' so much tea your pa would drink somethin' stronger,' says I.

Sally looked up kinder sudden an' says, 'Who says so?'

'Oh, everybody is talkin' about it. It's funny you ain't heard it afore. I was tellin' the doctor's wife of it t'other day, an' says I 'I wonder if they know how they talk about 'em. I believe I will just ask the next time I go there.' 'I wouldn't do so,' says she, 'I hain't heard no one but you speak of it, an' it might make 'em feel bad.' 'Why,' says I, 'I've heard more'n a dozen speak of it'—but la! Miss Dr. Phillips hain't got no more spirit'n a fly! Only think! t'other day I heard her say 'Thank you' to her hired girl.'

'Yes,' says Molly, in a quiet kind o' way, "Miss Phillips is careful not to hurt no one's feelin's; an' I dare say, she thinks it only right to be polite to everyone, even a servant.'

Says I, 'Mary Brown, don't Miss Phillips pay Bridget $2 a week to do her work? An' when she gets her pay in hard cash, is it a matter of necessity that she gets it in soft sawder, too?'

'O, as to that, it may not be necessary, but a kind word to servants, now an' then, makes 'em happy and don't cost nothin.'

'Well,' says I, 'I don't believe in makin' much o' hired help, for if you do they'll soon run over you.'

'Is that your experience, says Sally, smilin'.

Now Sally knows I don't never keep no girl, so I s'pose she thought that was cunnin'. But I was enough for her. Says I, grandly. 'People kin profit by observation as well as experience.'

'Well, my observation teaches me that kindness is its own reward, no matter on whom bestowed; servant, friend or foe," says Molly.

I see they was jest boun' to argue with me, so I jest sot an' cut out my bias trimmin' an' didn't say much. Bimeby Sally spoke: 'It'll be pretty dull for you, here today, with Pa an' Ma both gone.'

I had thought so myself, an' had thought some of goin' home—but jest then Molly came in an' said somethin' about the ice cream bein' ready, an' I thought I'd stay till after dinner anyway, for I set great store by ice cream. So says I, 'Be you makin' ice cream for dinner for jest you two? If you be, I'll jest stay an' help you eat it up, for it'll be wasted by night.'

'It's packed in ice,' says Sally, 'an' if there's more'n we can use afore it melts, we can send you over a dish.'

'O,' says I, 'it would be too bad to make you so much trouble; so I'll jest stay an' eat right here.'

Pretty soon Mary goes into the dinin' room an' goes to settin' the table for six instead of for us three! I begun to smell a rat, but kept still as long as I could, an' then says I: "Be you expectin' company?'

'Yes,' says Molly, who jest come into the kitchen for somethin', pa's going to bring a couple of friends home with him.'

'Relations?' says I.

'Not exactly.'

'Who be they, then?'

'Mr. Eugene Dayton an' Harry Fisher,' says Sally, spiteful like.

'O, so they're men folks. Married?

'No, but they're goin' to be,' says she, 'an' anyhow they're too young for you to ketch, an' she flounced out o' the room.'

Only think o' that, from a chit of seventeen to a respectable lady o' nearly fifty! Yes—I be nearly fifty, but I don't never let nobody know it, for some men won't look at a woman over forty, an' I've great hopes o' getting married yet. I'm goin' to get some new teeth first of Dr. Bissell up to Rochester—an' then, says I, I'm goin' to fishin' in earnest. I hain't never tried much yet, an' the few times I have has proved a blessin' I didn't succeed.

Well, finally dinner was about ready an' jest then Mr. Brown drove into the yard an' out jumped two stylish lookin' young men wearin' city clo'es and mostaches. Molly an' Sally had both gone to the door leavin' me settin' in the kitchen, but I peeked—jest a bit—an' honestly them young men took them girls right in their arms, an' the girls never said nothin' agin' it, nor their pa, neither! I never had no young man kiss me nor hug me neither, nor I don't think they'll ever dare to. If they should, I'd show 'em.

Well, they interduced me at the table, but Mr. Brown an' I had to do our visitin' by ourselves, for them girls hadn't no eyes nor ears for nobody but them young men. Laws! how silly! We had a good dinner, an' I hurried away as soon as I could decently, for I hate to wash dishes. But the girls had lots o' help, for I see one young man clearin' away the table, an' 'tother one a-wipin' dishes.

I stepped into Miss Fieldses on my way home an' tol' her all about it, an' 'spose it'll be all over the neighborhood to-morrow, for you might as well publish anythin' in the Rochester Union as tell it to her. She jest peddles everythin'. I always keep things to myself.

Well, heigho; I must lock up the house and go to b—. Well, I declare! if there ain't a light in every winder of Miss Brown's house! Such extravagance as them people do run into beats me. I wish I dared an' I'd jest run over to see what's up. Not that I'm curious; I hain't, but I like to keep things straight.—Ell Aye Wye.

The life-habits of people who have come to be centenarians are described in an interesting article in the British Medical Journal. Activity, out-of-door exercise, and early rising with moderation in diet seem to be the most important factors in longevity. 'Few things tend to promote health and vigor more than activity—activity without excitement — an activity which does not wear the body out. The candle ought to burn briskly, and, as a general rule, at both ends, regarding the head or brain as one, and the limbs or locomotory agents as the other; but it should not burn too fast.'

According to Professor Baird a fish has no maturity, and there is nothing to prevent it from living indefinitely and growing continually. A pike living in Russia dates back in age to the fifteenth century. In the Royal Aquarium at St. Petersburg are fish that have been there 140 years.

Swell No. 1 (pretending to mistake for an usher a rival whom he sees standing in evening dress at the cloak room door of the theatre: 'Ah! Have you a programme?' Swell No. 2 (equal to the occasion) 'Thanks, my man; got one from the other fellow.'—N. Y. Tribune.

A little girl in town whose brother uses slang to excess has been taught to say a certain prayer in verse each night. She recently hesitated as she fell on her knees at the bedside and said, "Mamma, shouldn't you be afraid God would say 'chestnuts' at me?"

DEVICES OF ADVERTISERS.

So many devices are resorted to by advertisers, that the ordinary reader sometimes become shy of the tempting paragraph, fearing the advice that is concealed in it like a pill in jelly. Who, for instance, on beginning this item, would have supposed that its purpose was to make known the truth that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is what it claims to be—a cure for a disease at once loathsome to friends, and annoying and even dangerous to the sufferer.

Read what Samuel G. Stiness, Supt. of Pawtucket Gas Co., Pawtucket, R. I., under date of Dec. 18, 1884, says: "I have used Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer for several years, and consider it the best as a positive cure for a cold, and possessing all the merits claimed for it." For sale at all druggists. Price, 25c., 50c., and $1.00.

Mothers, always use Dr. Seth Arnold's Soothing and Quieting Cordial for children. A mild, safe tonic, 25c.

Johnny's Meditation.

FRIDAY EVENING AFTER EXAMINATION.

Johnny threw himself down in an easy arm-chair,
And fell into meditation;
He had worked for a week in the puzzling affair
Of the yearly examination.

So he shut his eyes, as he sat in the chair—
Just to rests his tired eyelids he meant—
And he thought it all over while thus sitting there,
And this is the way that it went:

The indicative mood of three times fifty-four
And the cube of the torrid zone
Make what per cent of a baseball score
In longitude seventy-one?

There is something wrong about that I know,
And the next one is just as bad,
About parsing the ratio of Borneo
To the treaty of Trinidad.

I'll try the next: What rate per cent
Of the battle of Bunker Hill
Is the present tense of a continent
If the discount is charged in the bill?

I could work that out if I knew the price
Of the dividend's passive voice;
For the principal products are pronouns and rice
And Stark with his Green Mountain boys.

I'll never get on if I go on thus,
But the adjective's administration
Began with the downfall of minus and plus
And the square of the first conjugation.

Oh, me! it is all in a terrible mix,
And it is nearly the time for closing—
Hello! What's that? It's the clock striking six,
I certainly must have been dozing.

POSTSCRIPT—MONDAY EVENING.

Master Johnny insists on adding a line
To tell he came out quite straight;
His average standing was just eighty-nine,
His lowest mark seventy-eight.

INVESTMENT.

"Elsie!"

Walter Hartman's tone of sorrowful amazement made his young wife spring hastily to her feet. She had not heard him come in, and was kneeling beside a great arm-chair, sobbing as if her heart would break.

"Oh, Walter!" she said, "Aunt Julia—" and a fresh burst of sobs interrupted her.

Walter's face cleared. It was not sorsow of her own, then, that overwhelmed this pretty, blue-eyed darling he had married six months before.

"Well, Elsie," he said, taking her in his arms and caressing her, "what has happened Aunt Julia? Do not sob so, dear; you will make yourself ill."

"The fire!" said Elsie, keeping her sobs somewhat more under control. "You know I was very much worried when I first heard of it, for I could not tell by the papers whether Aunt Julia's house was in the burnt district or not."

For the great Chicago fire was not a week old, and the whole country was watching for news.

"Well, dear," said Walter, kindly.

"It is as bad as it can be, Walter; Aunt Julia writes to me that her house was totally destroyed, her very clothing burned up, and her insurance papers not entirely made out. She is absolutely without anything in the world except the clothes she had on. Actually fed by charity. Oh, Walter!"

Here the sobs came again, thick and fast, and Walter could offer no comfort but such as was conveyed by silent caresses. After a time these were so far effectual that Elsie could speak more calmly.

"Now, little one," Walter said, "tell me why this troubles you so sorely? Do you love your aunt so dearly?"

"She has been everything a mother could be to me since my parents died, Walter. But while I was with her we were very poor. Out of her own scanty means she fed, clothed educated me until I took the situation of nursery governess to your aunt's children, and married you. But just before we were married, an old friend of Aunt Julia's died in Chicago, and left her $10,000. When she went to claim her legacy, she saw the house she purchased, and liked it so much she bought it, her legacy covering the expense of the house, lot and furniture, while her own little income would support her. But, unfortunately, she was persuaded to draw out her tiny fortune and invest it in two lots adjoining her house. Now everything was swept away."

"She took care of you when you were a child?"

"For seventeen years, Walter, denying herself to feed and clothe me."

Walter did not speak again for many minutes, holding Elsie close in his arms At last he said, very gravely:

"If I were a rich man, Elsie, I would not stop to think in a case like this, but say at once 'Bring your aunt here.' But you know, little wife, my salary, though sufficient for all our wants, with a margin for pleasnre and saving a nest-egg, is yet not large. If I invite your aunt here, the difference of expenses must fall most heavily on you, because I cannot give you many pleasures that you now enjoy if I have one more to support. Concerts and jewelry, little gifts and pleasures, will be beyond our means then. But if you will be happier knowing your aunt has a home, I will go myself to Chicago and bring her here."

"Oh, Walter, how kind, how generous you are! I will never be able to thank you."

"Then I am to go. All right. I will get a leave of absence to-morrow. In the meantime, I will telegraph your aunt to meet me at the depot, if she has sent any address."

"The address is the lawyers' who arranged the legacy for her, and who did not live in the burnt district, Morse & Hunter."

A few days later, as fast as steam would carry Walter to Chicago and back, Elsie was waiting to welcome the travelers. A telegram had informed her that Walter had found Aunt Julia waiting at the depot, and by what train to expect him home. The only spare room in the pretty little house at Harlem, where Walter had brought his bride, was in dainty order. Jennie, the servant, was cooking the choicest supper Elsie could devise, and the little wife herself, neatly dressed, was running to the door every minute watching for the carriage.

It came at last, and Walter handed out a lady. Poor Elsie felt fairly sick, as the guest tottered rather than walked into the room. She was as white as ashes, her hair, Elsie remembered black as a coal not one year before, streaked with gray, and her eyes sunken as if with long illness. When the water-proof cloak fell from her shoulders, her shabby dress was most unlike Aunt Julia's habitual neatness. But, the first shock of surprise over, Elsie had no words too loving to welcome her aunt, while soft, tender kisses fell fast upon the pale face.

"She is very tired, Elsie," Walter whispered, seeing how vainly the white lips tried to frame words. "Get her to bed, dear, as soon as you can."

So Elsie, tearfully, lovingly, made her aunt lie down on the lounge, and then brought her the most tempting of teatrays, stopping the words of thanks by kisses and caresses. Walter, too, by a hundred delicate attentions and few spoken words made the guest feel that she was most cordially and gladly welcomed.

In her own room Aunt Julia told Elsie something of the horrors that had aged her more in one fortnight than during any previous two years of her life. She had slept upon the ground, in a drenching rain for two nights, then in a tent with no change of clothing, and the memory of the fire terrors to haunt her. She had begged the paper and stamp to write to Elsie. Then she told of Walter's tender care of her on the long journey, when she, racked by pain, often could not speak for hours, how like a son he had cared for her comfort. It was a sad story, and Elsie's tears fell fast.

"But now," she said, "you are at home. I have put underclothes and dry wrappers in here, Auntie, until we can have some dresses fitted. Let me undress you now."

Gently and tenderly the shabby clothes were removed, the weary feet bathed, the gray-streaked hair smoothed, and snowy linen put on for the night. Then utterly tired out, Aunt Julia sank into bed, whispering:

"Think, Elsie, I have not been in a bed for twelve nights!"

But alas! she was not soon to leave it. The haven of rest once gained, Aunt Julia lay for many long weeks dangerously ill with rheumatic fever brought on by exposure, while the tortured brain raved in the wildest delirium of scenes that chilled Elsie with horror.

All through these weary weeks Elsie was nurse, while Walter supplied every delicacy that could be found to tempt the invalid, patiently enduring the discomforts of a house haunted by sickness and proved himself, Jennie declared, "the nearest to an angel of any man she ever seed."

Winter was nearly over before Aunt Julia was able to leave her bed, crippled for life. The rheumatism had so twisted the joints of her hands, legs and feet, that they were useless and most of the time intensely painful. She fretted over the prospect of being a burden upon Walter and Elsie, with all the despair of a proud woman who had always maintained her own independence, and tearfully begged to be sent to some charitable asylum where she would be only a public expense. Elsie told Walter of this wish, and he went to Aunt Julia's room.

Taking the crippled, helpless hands in his own, holding them very tenderly, he said:

"Aunt Julia, Elsie has told me how hard these little hands worked for her for 17 long years. I love Elsie so dearly that to grieve her is my greatest sorrow. Do you think I could bear to see her pained if her second mother was sick and alone, nursed by hired hands while we are able and willing to give her love and care? Do not speak again of leaving us. I have not seen Elsie's face so sad as it is to-night since you came to us."

"But, Walter, think. I may live for years."

"I sincerely hope you will."

"And I can never have any use of my hands and feet more than I have now. I can scarcely feed myself or hobble across the room."

"The more reason you should have loving care. Why," and Walter laughed while his honest brown eyes proved his sincerity, "do you think all the love here is Elsie's? I want my share, too, auntie, for I love you, as well as my wife. I ask you to stay because I want you here. I have not heard Elsie sigh over long, lonely days since you came."

It took many more loving arguments, but at last Aunt Julia yielded. It was but truth that Walter spoke when he said she had won his love as well as Elsie's. She was very patient under excrutiating suffering, and very grateful for all the loving care lavished upon her. When the pain subsided, and she could talk, she was charming company, well read, and full of pleasant memories and bright observation.

While she felt herself a burden, Walter and Elsie regarded her as a blessing. Walter no longer worried at leaving Elsie alone all day, while he was at his business, and Elsie never tired of Aunt Julia, whose experience proved very valuable to the little housekeeper.

But month after month there was a scarcely perceptible failing of strength in the sorely tried body, long past youthful vigor. The rheumatic fever had left heart trouble, and distressing spells of suffocation and palpitation often threatened the invalid's life. Always patient, she yet often prayed for death to end her suffering, while Elsie prayed only that the dear life might be stayed.

She had been Walter Hartman's guest for two years, when her weakness increased to an alarming extent, rapidly and certainly till she could not leave her bed. It was while she was herself conscious that the end of her suffering was approaching that she received a letter from her lawyer in Chicago, informing her that he had received an offer of $20,000 for the lots of land she owned in that city.

She had looked upon her own beggary as so absolutely certain that at first she could scarcely credit the news; but Walter, in whose hands she had placed the business, soon proved the offer no dream by accepting the terms and informing Aunt Julia the money lay in the bank in her name.

"Now you can ride in your carriage when you are well," Elsie said, smiling but tearfully, "I am so glad, Auntie. You will have something now for your old age."

"But no old age, Elsie," was the glad reply. "I am glad, too, darling, very glad, but not for that."

By her own request a lawyer came and made her will, and then Aunt Julia, as if the care of life was ended for her, sank rapidly, growirg every day weaker and more dependent upon Elsie's loving, never-failing care.

It was in early Spring, when, one evening as Walter came in, Jennie met him with her honest face all disfigured by crying.

"Sure, sir, it's asking for you, Miss Julia is."

"Is she worse?"

"Ah, sir, she's going fast. The doctor says she'll not last the night."

Going fast. Walter could see that the girl's words were true as he softly entered the room where Aunt Julia rested, her head upon Elsie's shoulder, her hands clasped fast in Elsie's.

"I am glad you came," she whispered. "I think I could not go without thanking you again and saying farewell."

"What I have done," Walter said, his heart swelling with emotion, "was gladly, lovingly done. I do not need thanks, Aunt Julia."

"I believe that, but I am not less grateful, because you gave from a full heart. May God bless you and yours, Walter. May what you have done for a crippled, penniless woman come back to you in your old age laden with her blessings. Kiss me farewell, Walter."

Reverently he bent over her, pressing a loving kiss upon the withered lips, while tears that were no shame to his manhood stood in his eyes. A few broken words to Elsie, a murmured prayer, and the gentle spirit was released from the weary, pain-racked frame. Tears of true love fell upon the wasted face, placid in death's sleep. Every kind word was cherished when the lips that had spoken it were mute, and Aunt Julia had two true mourners at her funeral, while many of the friends of years gone by came to pay the last tribute of respect to her memory.

It did not surprise Elsie when she learned that her Aunt Julia had left her the fortune that came too late to gladden her own life. But she told Walter when the will was read to her:

"I am glad we never thought of the land, Walter, in the years that Aunt Julia was with us. It would have made me hesitate often to show her all the love in my heart if I had ever thought she would have money to leave me."

"She knew, darling, it was all love, yet I am glad my Elsie has some reward for the patient, tender care thet alleviated the suffering of the poor invalid who rests at last."

And Elsie, nestling close in Walter's arms, said softly:

"If I could love you more, Walter, than I did when I married you, I should do so when I think of your kindness and generosity to Aunt Julia."

"It was odd," Walter said, "that the money that Aunt Julia invested in Chicago should be actually doubled, for I have seen her weep often when she spoke of her 'unfortunate investment' of her friend's legacy."

LETTERS OF RECOMMENDATION.

A gentleman once advertised for a boy to assist him in his office.

Nearly fifty applied for the place. Out of the whole number, he in a short time chose one and sent the rest away.

"I should like to know," said a friend, "on what ground you chose that boy. He had not a single recommendation with him."

"You are mistaken," said the gentleman; "he had a great many:

He wiped his feet when he came in and closed the door after him; showing that he was orderly and tidy.

He gave up his seat instantly to the lame old man who entered; showing that he was kind and thoughtful.

He took off his hat when he came in, and answered my questions promptly and respectfully; showing that he was polite.

He lifted up the book which I had purposely laid on the floor, and placed it on the table, while all the rest had stepped over it or shoved it aside, showing that he was careful.

And he waited patiently for his turn instead of pushing the others aside; showing that he was modest.

When he wrote his name I observed that his finger-nails were clean, instead of being tipped with jet like the handsome little fellow's in the blue jacket.

When I talked with him I noticed that his clothes were carefully brushed, his hair in nice order, and his teeth white as milk.

Don't you call these things letters of recommendation? I do; and what I can tell about a boy by using my eyes for ten minutes is worth more than all the fine letters he can bring me."

The little daughter of a Lewiston, (Me.) clergyman was heard talking as she lay in her crib the other night, and this is what she said:

"Dear Lord, this afternoon I saw out on the cold sidewalk a poor little girl, and she had no shoes or stockings on—and it's none of our business, is it God?"—Stray.

Two Leaves.

A crimson leaf, a golden leaf,
With sunlight all aglow,
Drifted away from the parent stem
To the untried realms below.

A light wind caught the golden leaf
And carried it out to sea;
But the crimson leaf lay soft and warm
Beneath the mother tree.

Softly the silvery dews came down
When the rose tints left the sky,
And the evening star smiled down on them
With tender watchful eye.

Then the morning sunlight kissed awake
The leaf beneath the tree,
And lightly touched the golden flake
Adrift upon the sea.

The cool waves tossed the tender thing
To and fro on its breast
And dashed it against the sharp shore rocks,
And would not let it rest.

Then it sighed, "Ah me, for my quiet home,
From pitiless waters free!"
And the crimson leaf in its sheltered nook,
Cried, "Oh, for the crimson sea!"

It longed to wander away, away,
Over the waters wide;
But instead of the ocean's spray, for her
Was the dew of eventide.

So the days slipped by with beauty and bloom
Scattered on every hand;
But the crimson leaf saw only the sea,
And the golden leaf the land.

Hearts, like leaves, unsatisfied,
Yearn for that which is not,
And in their pain and bitterness
Cry out against their lot.

Nor dream that in their daily path
God's choicest blessings lie;
So, longing for days that never come,
Their wasted years slip by.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

No matter how strong may be every link in a chain of circumstantial evidence, there is always a doubt, a lack of certainty, that should weaken it and cause us to distrust it. I remember a story my grandfather used to tell of a case in which an innocent life was sacrificed for a guilty person.

A boy on a farm, for some misdemeanor was sentenced by his father, a stern man, with an eye to saving a half-price ticket, to be deprived of his annual circus privilege, and in addition he was to hoe so many rows of corn while the rest of the family took in the lady's pad act, the bareback riding of Jack Robinson, the club that killed Captain Cook, and other attractions of the great moral show. The boy watched the wagon drive away with tears in his eyes, and then he went at the corn rows with a determination to make a short crop if it could be worked without detection.

But he grew hungry after a while and went into the house to investigate the pantry. There were seven pies—it was an American household—seven blackberry pies baked for Sunday. The boy, who was not feeling very well himself, soon placed his person anterior to six of the pies, but paused thoughtfully and with keen regret midway on the seventh. One half of that he left. He then caught the family cat, thrust her nose and feet into the pie, and dropped her on the clean, white sanded floor of the pantry that she might track around on it. Then he went back to his corn rows.

Even brought the family home. The boy saw them climb joyously out of the big wagon. He noted how the over-ripe apples fell from the trees when his sister jumped over the side and alighted flat-footed on the ground. He saw his father let himself down over the double tress and get himself kicked twice by the roan colt. He saw his mother waiting patiently until somebody had time and inclination to take the baby. He saw his grand-mother perch herself on the hub of the hind wheel on one foot, while she made vague, circumferential, wandering excursions for the wide, wide world, with the other. He saw his brothers let themselves down over the tailgate and sneak away to avoid doing any work. At last the wagon was empty, and there were visible signs of excitement about the house.

"The raid is discovered," said the boy, cutting the roots of a healthy stalk of corn and carefully hilling up a vigorous lance weed. Presently he saw his father come out of the house with the gun over his shoulder and the cat under his arm. "The culprit is arrested," remarked the young robber as he leaned thoughtfully upon his hoe and watched his father disappear behind the barn. The sharp report of a gun rang out upon the quiet of the sunset hour.

"There," said the boy, with the confident expression of one who knows what he is talking about, "There goes another victim to circumstantial evidence."—R. J. Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

FORTUNE TELLING.

He was having his fortune told. "I see," said the medium, contracting her eyebrows and turning her toes in, "I see the name of John."

"Yes," said the sitter, indicating thtt he had heard the name before.

"The name seems to have given you a great deal of trouble."

"It has."

"This John is an intimate friend."

"That's so," he said, wonderingly.

"And often leads you to do things you are sorry for."

"True, every word."

"His influence over you is bad."

"Right again."

"But you will soon have a serious quarrel, when you will become estranged."

"I'm glad of that. Now spell out the whole name."

The "mejum" opened one eye and studied the face of her sitter. Then she wrote some cabalistic words and handed it to him in exchange for her fee.

"Do not read it until you are home," she said solemnly. "It's your friend's whole name."

When he reached home he lit the gas and gravely examined the paper. There he read in picket-fence characters the name of his friend—Demi-John!—Detroit Free Press.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, MARCH 25, 1887.

An old established firm which employed 400 operatives and paid them over $200,000 per annum, has been driven out of Danvers by the Knights of Labor. Perhaps that sort of thing pays.

Brooklyn now talks of a free public library as a memorial of Henry Ward Beecher. This would be one of the best possible memorials, and one that would best please the great preacher.

The prohibition of railroad pools in the new interstate commerce law, is a direct incentive to extensive railroad consolidations, says Charles Francis Adams, and the indications are that he prophesies very closely to the truth.

Old Winter proposes to go out with flying colors. Tuesday's snowstorm was one of the worst of the whole winter in Berkshire county and northern New England, and the drifts were piled up in a way that gave the railroads plenty to do to get trains through.

The Maine Legislature has decided to try the abolition of capital punishment again, but takes away the pardoning power from the governor and council, unless the convict's innocence is proven, and in all cases of murder in the first degree the condemned are to be kept in solitary confinement.

Vermont has had the severest winter for many years, with four months of continuous sleighing, and a total snowfall of fully twelve feet in many sections. The snow is higher than the fences now in the central part of the state, and the lateness of the season is likely to greatly reduce the yield of maple sugar.

A Washington physician prophesies that President Cleveland will not live out his term unless he takes more exercise and eases up on his work. This coincides with the opinion of many observing people, though Col. Lamont declares that there is no ground for such an apprehension, as the president takes as much exercise as most men, and is in perfect condition.

Emperor William's ninetieth birthday was celebrated throughout the German empire, Tuesday, with hearty enthusiasm, as was fitting. The kaiser is really a remarkable old gentleman, able still to hold the reins of government, and his life has been one of rare success. He has accomplished the dream of centuries in establishing German unity, and is ruler of the strongest empire on the continent. He has always led to victory, never to defeat, and it is not strange that he is strong in the affections of his people.

Close upon the heels of last week's railroad disaster came a horror of another kind, in the burning of the new Richmond hotel at Buffalo, N. Y., last Friday morning. The house was full of guests, and the building burned like tinder, but the prompt ringing of the fire alarm bells in the rooms reduced the loss of life largely without doubt. The telegraph wires greatly impeded the raising of ladders, and many terror-stricken guests jumped from the windows, while others were terribly burned in running the fiery gauntlet of the burning stairs. The number of deaths, as far as now known, is 10, with several missing.

President Cleveland has had hard work to get the men he wanted for the new national interstate railroad commission, but the names were announced Tuesday, as follows:

Thomas M. Cooley of Michigan for the term of six years.
William R. Morrison of Illinois for the term of five years.
Augustus Schoonmaker of New York for the term of four years.
Aldace F. Walker of Vermont for the term of three years.
Walter A. Bragg of Alabama for the term of two years.

Massachusetts might have had ex-Gov. Robinson or ex-Congressman Crapo on the commission, but neither would accept. The board consists of three Democrats and two Republicans, and is believed to be an able one, three of the members having made a special study of railroad matters.

The talked-of lease of the Boston and Lowell Railroad to the Boston and Maine is now an accomplished fact, lacking only the approval of the stockholders. It is understood that the Boston and Maine will pay 8 per cent on the Lowell stock. Work on the Central Massachusetts is to be pushed forward vigorously, and the lease is likely to make quite a change in the terminal arrangements of the roads in Boston. It is intimated that the Boston and Maine contemplates even further extensions, by getting hold of the Fitchburg road if possible. Then let the Boston and Albany, and the New York, New Haven and Hartford roads consolidate and buy up the New England and Providence roads, and New England would be pretty well in the hands of two big monopolies.

A surprising fact, having an important bearing upon the cause of the Forest Hills disaster, was brought to light last Friday, before the railroad commissioners, in the reading of a letter from the commissioners to the superintendent of the road in December, 1881, in which his attention was particularly called to the Bussey bridge. "The superstructure of this bridge is an oddity among bridges," said the commissioners, and they suggested frequent tests to see if the bridge was maintaining its strength and safety. But nothing appears to have been done about it, nor do the commissioners seem to have given the matter any further thought. The commissioners deserve sharp criticism for not seeing that their suggestions were carried out, and the road clearly was criminally careless in the matter. The evidence before the board shows conclusively that people were afraid of the structure. The deaths from the disaster now number 26. It appears that at least three fires started in the wreck, and a holocaust was prevented only by the favorable locality in which the accident occurred.

Eighty buildings were destroyed by fire on the Chautauqua assembly grounds at Jamestown, N. Y., Monday morning.

The overflow of the Missouri river is causing a vast amount of damage in Dakota.

The roads of the town are in an exceedingly bad condition in many places, and in some are dangerous, the recent thaws and storms having washed and gullied them badly.

It is reported that more than one seller of the ardent in this village is already looking for a location elsewhere, in consequence of the vote Monday. Let them go—the town can spare them.

Writes a correspondent: "The stand your paper has taken on the temperance question meets with much aprobation from your patrons in this vicinity, and without doubt did much toward helping the noes at the recent election."

A large audience assembled at the Congregational church last Sunday evening to hear the temperance address of Rev. Hugh Montgomery, who held the attention of his audience for some two hours in portraying the evils of intemperance.

A lack of space prevents a full report from the surrounding towns this week, and a great deal of interesting matter is unavoidably left out. With the new volume, which commences next week, the Journal will endeavor to make up for all past deficiences.

How would a board of trade work in Palmer? There are numerous towns around us which have one, its work being to look after any enterprise or firm which might be induced to locate in the town, etc. It seems as though something might be done in that line here.

Any one who once stops with Landlord Belcher of the Nassowanno House is sure to do so the next time he is in town, or in this section. So the Rogers Uncle Tom's Cabin Company, having two days to lay off in this section, came to Palmer to spend them at the Nassowanno House.

Some 20 Palmer people went to Ludlow Monday evening, to help celebrate the 25th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Miller, taking twenty-five silver dollars as an offering of friendship. The Memorial church quartette of Springfield was present and after supper concert was had in the hall. The party returned by special train about midnight.

In spite of the stormy weather the Woman's Relief Corps had a large attendance at their presentation of "The Veteran of 1812," Tuesday evening, and gave a good performance. All of the parts were well taken, but Miss Anna Fay of Ware as "Kesiah," brought down the house by her clever rendering of the part. The piece was so well received that it was repeated Wednesday evening, drawing a good house the second time. The net proceeds will be nearly $50.

In politics the successful candidate hardly dares say his soul is his own, but is compelled to do about as his party leaders say. One of the board of selectmen elected Monday has already been compelled to refuse to sign the appointment of J. A. Palmes as special police officer until May 1st, "because of some things around, you know." The appointment was only asked for until the first of May, in order that Mr. Palmer might finish up some work he was engaged upon for the town.

Messrs. C. M. and C. C. Abbe of this village were called to their home at Haydenville, Ct., by a telegram on Monday evening, to mourn the death of their father, Mr. John Abbe, who met with a fatal accident that afternoon. While attempting to cross a bridge over the Scantic river at Scitica, Ct., his horse became frightened, backed against the rotten railing, which gave way, and team, driver and all were precipited over the abutment nearly twenty feet, striking on the rocks below. Mr. Abbe was taken up in an unconscious state, from which he never recovered, having a fractured skull and terrible bodily injuries, death coming to his relief in a few hours. A large circle of relatives and friends mourn his decease. He leaves a wife, four grown up sons and a daughter, the latter Miss Alice L. Abbe, teacher of the Blanchardville school.

JUST AS APPLICABLE TO PALMER.

The good people who voted "No" on Monday will find pleasant reading—and those who voted "Yes" will find food for sober reflection—in the following from the Boston Record:

The town of Melrose, at its March town meeting, voted—426 to 2—not to allow any liquor licenses for the next year. This, we believe, is the most striking vote on this matter cast by any of our suburban towns. Now, what is the result? Since that vote was announced a considerable number of people, who probably had not thought of Melrose before as a place of residence, have been out there looking around to buy a home. They said that a town which cast so large an anti-license vote as that must be a good place to live in and a good place to rear families. There is a world of suggestion in this thing. Decent people with children to bring up do not care to locate next door to a grog shop. If they see a town where rum selling is definitely disposed of, they are inclined to think that it must have other merits besides the one that we have mentioned. As a mere matter of business, looking out for the prosperity of the town, Melrose could be done nothing more satisfactory than to have cast the large anti-license vote which she did. There is no need to draw a moral from this tale.

THE ANNUAL TOWN MEETING.

Monday was as fine a day overhead as could be wished for town meeting, and it called out an unusually large vote. The number of ballots cast were 704, out of about 950 voters registered, one of the largest, if not the largest, ever cast in the town. Thomas W. Kenefick was chosen moderator, but could not be found, and the next choice was William Carroll. He had little to do, however, for all articles except those relating to the election of officers were laid aside until the adjourned meeting, two weeks later. The great interest of the day was in regard to the liquor question, both sides working hard. The result was a genuine surprise to all, even the temperance people themselves, who had not expected nearly so large a majority. The women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union served hot coffee and dougnuts, and also did excellent work in distributing "No" ballots. During the early part of the meeting a portion of the floor broke down, owing to some rotten timbers, but as there was no cellar under the building, no one was hurt. There were plenty of split tickets, there being some nine different kinds, and it took four hours to count the ballots. The following is the vote cast, a star indicating election:

NOTES.

Good for Palmer.

The noes "got there" in good shape.

Now let the law be enforced sharply and impartially.

Rather nice, now, to have the ladies around, isn't it? How much nicer it would be if they could vote, too!

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. are very grateful to the voters for their courteous treatment accorded them at the town house Monday,—and the voters surely ought to feel thankful to the ladies for the refreshments so generously served by them.

The liquor men were determined to defeat Constable Palmer, and they succeeded. Thus is a capable and faithful officer put aside to gratify personal and political prejudices.

There was no opposition against J. B. Shaw for town clerk and treasurer.

Editor of the Journal:—The measure of the value of any law which may be passed for the government of a state is found in measure to which the same law is enforced. This is a truism, yet it needs emphasizing at the present moment. We may cover our statute books with the grandest laws, yet the value of these laws must be found in the spirit with which they are accepted and enforced by the people. The town of Palmer has just decided by an emphatic expression the wishes of its citizens, that no license for the sale of liquors within its borders shall be granted for the coming year. There are many who have favored this decision who consider it almost the final victory for their cause in this locality. For such this item is written. It is the standing accusation of many, and one that cost the cause of temperance some votes last Monday, that no prohibition of the sale of liquor in this town has ever been more than a farce. It is openly charged that a few years since, when this same law of no license was enacted, it was enforced in an unfair and arbitrary manner; that certain men were subjected to repeated overhaulings, while others were allowed to ply their vile trade without the slightest effort to detect and punish them; and that in certain well known instances men who were loudest in their denunciations of rum selling previous to town meeting and afterwards, were known to connive with rumsellers for the evasion of the law. Whether these charges be true or false they are made, and are one of the heaviest burdens which the temperance cause in this locality must carry. If true it is no wonder that people are not converted by the mouthings of hypocritical ranters. If false they still indicate that the people are not satisfied with the enforcement of a no license law when it was voted by the people.

We have reached a crisis in this temperance question in Palmer. Whether rum selling by law is ended or not depends upon the temperance men of this place. The battle is just begun. The skirmishing is ended and we are in a position to force the issue if we will. If during the coming year favoritism or hypocrisy is allowed to dictate the enforcement of the law, then we may expect for years to come to see a reaction in favor of an impartial administering of the law, under which one man can sell rum as easily as another, whether he is a "nearest neighbor," "an old schoolmate," or a stranger to the members of a "committee" appointed to enforce a no license law. If, on the contrary, with malice toward none, with only a desire to hold all men equal before the law, we proceed in an honest, earnest manner to enforce the will of the people expressed on Monday last, we may be sure that for some time at least the open bar will not ornament our village. Let us choose those who are above all trickery to do our work. Let us insist that no man is qualified to vindicate our laws who cannot rise above personal vindictiveness. Let us choose no person for our work whose chief desire is to "make a dollar." Let us insist that principles must rule, and that the interests of true temperance are greater than those of any rumseller or officer of the law. With these for our guides there is no doubt that legal rum selling in Palmer was buried on Monday last "by a large majority."

A "No-License" Man.

Music by Danforth & Thompson's orchestra, singing by Mrs. Norcross, Miss Feather, Charles Orcutt, and others. As this is the last gathering of the conference year, it is hoped there will be a large attendance of the public in general.

The town is infested on or about the 20th of each month with pack peddlers, who in the majority of cases have no license. The merchants who pay taxes and the public who generally are swindled by them should delegate a prosecuting committee to abate the nuisance. It would not require the outlay of any large amount for detectives, for proof can be easily obtained of their violation of law.

And now comes the annual agitation of who shall be selectmen for another year. G. H. Newton, who has been on the board for the last three years, says "he won't." The Prohibitionists have decided to hold the whip over the other parties, and if they don't nominate to suit will enter the field with a ticket. Whether there is to be a citizens' caucus or straight party nominations is not as yet decided, though it is probable that each party will make separate nominations.

A large audience listened to the address of Rev. Hugh Montgomery at Memorial Town Hall last Sunday afternoon. The speaker condemed the weak-kneed selectmen of the country towns. He claimed that druggist liquors did not analyze for purity equal to that sold slyly on back streets in the kitchen, hit the representative from the tenth district a slap for desiring to change the law relative to the methods of the district attorney in continuing liquor cases, gave some interesting and sober solemn facts about liquor selling, told the old "chestnut" about the passenger who said he was going to "Hell" and was left by the conductor at Palmer, urged the necessity of voting as you pray, and gave a very entertaining, instructive appeal for no-license, which will undoubtly be re-echoed at the annual town meeting, as it has been ever since the law came in force.

TOWN STATISTICS.

The annual town report, which is now in the hands of the printer, will show these figures. The total expenses last year were $20,943.78, as follows: Schools and school expenses, $8350.59; highways, $2627.95; liquor prosecutions, $734 06; poor at farm, $1940 56; poor away, $1238 12; library and reading room, $300; old bills, $616.10; miscellaneous, $4192.40. The town debt was reduced $2134 94 last year, leaving the debt now $13,991.50. There is a balance in the treasury of $1255.68. The number of tramps cared for during the year was 259. There were 15 paupers at the town farm during the year, the average being 12⅔. The whole number of weeks was 677, with an average of 44 for each inmate, the net cost of support being $1 94⅔ per week for each person. The inventory at the farm is $225.33 more than last year. The school committee report good progress generally in the schools, but make a plea for a new building on the ground of present insufficient room. The whole number of pupils enrolled is 602, or 43 less than last year, with an average attendance of 540.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS—A GOOD OUTLOOK FOR THE COMING YEAR.

The business outlook for the coming year is very promising, if we may judge of the plans being made, the work now progressing, and the prospective enterprises that usually follow a season of prosperity. The woolen mills of Solomon F. Cushman—being the lately erected brick mill on the site of one burned, and the West Branch mills—are turning out goods to their full capacity; the mills of R. M. & T. Reynolds—the one manufacturing fancy cassimeres and the other a very fine quality and style of ladies' goods—are running on full time with orders ahead; Ellis & Son's mill is fully equipped in every department, and the demand for their goods is greater than the production; Lindley & Co. at North Monson run both of their mills with a full complement of help, and have met with ready sales in the past and report demand for the future; the straw manufactory of Fay, Peck & Co. has never turned out more shapes in ladies' goods, and the present indication is that they will not close their winter term till July 1st, with a short vacation before commencing the summer term; The Gage & Reynolds' mens hat factory have made and finished an unusual large amount of straw hats, and have orders daily for work which must last some months to come; the Flynt Granite Co. have never had so much work on hand at this season of the year as now, their many contracts for cut stone having necessitated keeping a large force at work on orders which will take them well into the season to complete; the new saw mill recently erected by Arba Squier near the quarry railroad bridge is being well patronized by our farmers and others, and the capacity of 6000 feet per day makes business lively in the millyard, and satisfactorily proves that it will be a permanant institution; William Lewis at his state street mill is doing an extensive business in grinding grains as well as in sawing wood for the accomodation of patrons; there will undoubtly be an unusual impetus given to building this season, as many are looking around for available lots on which to locate a home. George L. Keeney will build a two-story dwelling on Pease avenue, on the lot he recently purchased of Edwin G. Knowlton; Arba Squier is to build a new house on Pearl street, and Mr. Shepardson of Wales will build on Prospect street; John Murphy will build on Highland avenue, Charles E. Stebbins on East State street, and Eugene B. Farrell either on Prospect street or State street. John C. Maguire has some available lots on the new street recently laid out, and parties are negotating with him with a view of building. Emanuel Fuzzie will erect a double tenement house on Bridge street, and Rev. Father Lee has in consideration the building of a commodious parsonage on the lot now occupied for the same; It is also probable that at the forthcoming town meeting the town will erect a spacious, ample and convenient school building, for the demands upon the school committee the past year for more school room have been so great that it hardly seems possible that it can be put over any longer, and various locations are mentioned, one being a lot now owned by the town on State street. Some people favor the buying of the Sabin property on Main street, others suggesting the location now occupied by Alfred Norcross on Lyon street. As the old bridge near Cushman's mill is sadly out of repair it is probable a new one of either stone, wood or iron will have to be erected soon, which with many contemplated repairs by private individuals and the probable erection of a $15,000 or $20,000 church by the Universalist society on the corner of Main and Lincoln streets, the coming season bids fair as one of prosperity and growth for the town, and thrift and employment for the citizens.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Several new cases of scarlet fever have been reported recently.

The crosswalks have been kept nicely cleaned off the past week.

The schools of the village have a two weeks' vacation, commencing April 1st.

Arthur Jennings has a position as clerk in the office of Smith & Wesson, Springfield.

Will the ladies assist at the Town Hall next Monday in carrying the town for temperance?

Young Marland has bought Jesse Banister's farm of land situated in one of the rural districts, for $1200.

The annual meeting of the East Congregational society will be held at the chapel next Thursday afternoon.

The warrant for the town meeting next Monday has 29 articles, which ought to interest our citizens enough to insure a large attendance.

P. H. Sagendorph has bought the little farm of Edward Kenney, on Church street, for $3500. The buildings were erected by John Eddy about 30 years ago.

George Hawley, one of Coney's carpenters, had portions of the two middle fingers of his right hand taken off by a circular saw while at work on Saturday.

There will be a grand temperance rally at the town hall next Sunday evening at 7 30 o'clock. The meeting will be addressed by J. R. Kane of Spencer, and others.

It is reported that the upper story of Dr. Yale's block on Main street is to be remodded for a photograph room, to be occupied by J. C. Yale, formerly of Franklin.

It is reported that several wholesale liquor dealers are coming to town next Monday to help by their presence and money to carry the town for rum another year.

The Boston Pinafore Company under the management of Chas. Atkinson will present this most successful opera at the Town Hall next Tuesday evening. See advertisement.

A petition has been presented to Postmaster Byrns to have the postoffice remain where it is, signed by all the corporations and four-fifths of the business men in town, as well as the majority of the town officials, physicians, both lawyers and many others.

The young men of the Methodist society will give a supper and entertainment in the church vestry next Tuesday evening. The supper will be wholly in charge of the young men. The entertainment will be music, the temperance drama, "Tempted, or the Sailor's Return," and a farce.

Fire was discovered about 3 o'clock Thursday morning in one of the tenement houses which were nearly ready for occupancy, erected by Henry F. Barnes. The fire quickly communicated to another three tenement block and both were nearly destroyed. Loss estimated at $6000; insured for $4400.

The operation of overiorating was successfully performed on a patient at the residence of Dr. O. W. Roberts a few days since by Dr. Carmichael of Springfield, assisted by Dr. Roberts and others. The case was of a very serious nature of malignant growth, but the patient has done remarkably well, and is now considered out of danger.

P. H. Sagendorph, who has this week retired from the jewelry business, learned his trade in this town, worked for a time in Boston, but has been in business in the same place for 22 years, having bought out H. S. Parsons in 1865. Mr. Sagendorph during his business career has been known as one of the most honest, square dealing men on the street.

All citizens of Ware interested in the promotion of temperance, or desirous of a reform in the execution of the laws now on the statute regarding the sale of intoxicating liquors, or desiring generally to promote the cause of good morals and good government in this community, are requested to meet at the Town Hall this evening at 8 o'clock to see what measures it is best to take for the furtherance of those objects.

Frank L. Bassett, who for over ten years was with P. H. Sagendorph in the jewelry business, and since 1883 has been in business at Rockville, Conn., has bought out the business of Mr. Sagendorph and moved his family to this place. The Leader of Rockville says: "Mr Bassett has built up a good business during his short stay in Rockville, and besides, made a host of friends who, while wishing him success, regret his departure." Mr. L. E. Croteau will be retained in charge of the repair department.

Editor Standard:—President Seelye of Amherst recently gave an account of the chief cause for the discontinuance of the building of the Massachusetts Central R. R. some eight years ago, which may be of interest to Ware people. When the road was started there existed a certain gentleman by the name of Reilly. Being a very accomplished man of business, he was for some time in the employ of Brewster, Barrett & Co. of Boston, but on account of his habit of drinking was discharged. Reilly was next taken up by Sweet & Co., bankers, of the same city, and made the real manager of the firm. One forenoon one of the banks demanded the payment of a loan of $300,000 from Sweet & Co. by two o'clock that afternoon. Mr. Sweet was sick; his son out of town; and Reilly away on a "drunk." The clerks in the office became frightened and did not know how to raise the money. Two o'clock came, there had been no arrangements made for the payment of the loan, the paper was protested and the house failed. That there was no need for the failure is evident, since when matters were settled Mr. Sweet came out with a half a million dollars. The bonds from which the railroad derived its money for construction were held largely by this firm, and of course were thrown on the market. The result was their dropping from 80 to 40, and thus the revenue for continuing the work was shut off. Had Reilly been present the money could have been raised to meet the bank's demands, and the road would doubtless have been finished several years ago. It seems strange that the debauch of one man should have wrecked a railroad that would have been of great benefit to so many throughout the central part of the state. **

No matter what parts it may finally affect, catarrh always starts in the head, and belongs to the head. There is no mystery about the origin of this direful disease. It begins in a neglected cold. One of the kind that is "sure to be better in a few days." Thousands of victims knows how it is by sad experience. Ely's Cream Balm cures colds in the head and catarrh in all its stages. Not a snuff nor a liquid.

The Art Amateur for April gives an attractive figure study in two colors by J. Carrol Beckwith; a fine study of tulips by Victor Dangon; a double-page "Flight of Swallows" for panel decoration; designs for cups and saucers, a chocolate jug (chicory) and a double tile (butterflies and honeysuckles); a dogwood design for an embroidered chair-back, and a variety of outline sketches, monograms, and minor designs for art work. The number is especially rich in suggestions for fruit painting, both in oils and in mineral colors. There are also valuable practical articles on sketching from nature, painting from the cast, church applique work and the "Figure in the Foreground" in amateur photography, and the useful talks with decorators are continued. Articles of special interest are those relating to the A. T. Stewart collection, the Wm. Chase exhibition and "Pictures in Paris," and "My Note Book" overflows with gossip and information about pictures, porcelain and bric-a-brac. Price 35 cents. WHAT TRUE MERIT WILL DO.

The unprecedented sale of Boschee's German Syrup within a few years, has astonished the world. It is without doubt the safest and best remedy ever discovered for the speedy and effectual cure of coughs, colds and the severest lung troubles. It acts on an entirely different principle from the usual prescriptions given by physicians, as it does not dry up a cough and leave the disease still in the system, but on the contrary removes the cause of the trouble, heals the parts affected and leaves them in a purely healthy condition. A bottle kept in the house for use when the diseases make their appearance, will save doctor's bills and a long spell of serious illness. A trial will convince you of these facts. It is positively sold by all druggists and general dealers in the land. Price, 75 cents, large bottles. 46-eow-ly

FIVE PER CENT
REGISTERED AND COUPON WATER WORKS TRUST BONDS
OF THE
NATIONAL WATER WORKS INVESTMENT COMPANY,
NEW YORK.
Capital, $500,000.
Secured by the pledge of Six Per Cent Water Bonds deposited with the Farmer's Loan & Trust Co.

DIRECTORS.

George F. Baker, President First National bank, New York.
C. C. Pomeroy, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.
E. W. Clark, of Messrs. E. W. Clark & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
H. C. Fahnestock, Vice-President First National bank, New York.
F. M. Colston, of Messrs. Wilson, Colston & Co., Baltimore, Md.
Theodore C. Woodbury, of Messrs. Woodbury & Moulton, Portland, Me.
Archer N. Martin, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.

These bonds, the direct obligation of the National Water Works Investment Company, have the following advantages to investors:

First—As security, a direct charge against the capital of The National Water Works Investment company, amounting to $500,000.

Second—The benefit of the trained talent, experience and judgment of the experts employed by The National Water Works Investment company and the business judgment of its Directors.

Third—Constantly-increasing security. The municipalities, either directly or otherwise, make such contracts with the water-works companies as to give them practically the exclusive right to supply water. Every increase in the population increases the demand for water, and the consequent revenue of the company; as the city grows, therefore, the revenue of the water company and the security of these bonds correspondingly increase.

Fourth—The company sees that, as greater security to the bonds which it purchases, assignments are made by the local water company directly to a trust company of the revenue delivered from the city for fire protection, etc., for the benefit of the bondholders, so that the investor will have the further security of the municipal obligations in addition to that of the local company and that of The National Water Works Investment company.

These bonds will, therefore, combine the advantages of Municipal Obligation. Direct Obligation of The Local Water Works company and the Absolute Obligation of The National Water Works Investment company.

It is believed that these securities are an absolutely safe investment, based on an element vital to the existence of every community, secured by most stringent provisions for the protection of the investor, and having the additional advantages of ready convertibility.

These bonds are for sale in denominations of $1000, $500 and $100, by

London Bridge.

Proud and lowly, beggar and lord,
Over the bridge they go,
Rags and velvet, fetter and sword,
Poverty, pomp and woe.
Who will stop to laugh and sing?
Self is calling, and self is king!
Who weeps at the beggar's grave?
Crusts they pray for, but love they crave.

Beggar and lord,
Fetter and sword,
Prison and palace, shadow and sun,
Velvet and rags,
So the world wags,
Until the river shall no more run.

Sparkle, river, merrily roll!
Laugh with the gay and bright;
Who will care for the weary soul
Under thy arch to-night?
Who will pity her, who will save?
Never a tear the cold wave gave!
Down there in the rolling Thames—
God will pity what man condems.

Velvet and rags,
So the world wags,
Prison and palace, shadow and sun,
Fettered and free,
So shall it be,
Until the river shall no more run.

CROSSING THE CONNECTICUT AT ALBANY.

If I were a boy again and knew what I know now, I would not be quite so positive in my opinions as I used to be. Boys generally think that they are very certain about many things. A boy of fifteen is a great deal more sure of what he knows than is a man of fifty. You ask a boy a question and he will answer you right off, up and down; he knows all about it. Ask a man of large experience and ripe wisdom the same question, and he will say, "Well, there is much to be said about it. I am inclined on the whole, to think so and so, but other intelligent men think otherwise."

When I was eight years old I traveled from Central Massachusetts to Western New York, crossing the river at Albany, and going by canal from Schenectady to Syracuse. On the canal boat a kindly gentleman was talking to me one day, and I mentioned the fact that I had crossed the Connecticut river at Albany. How I got it in my head that it was the Connecticut river I do not know, for I knew my geography very well then; but in some unaccountable way I had it fixed in my mind that the river at Albany was the Connecticut, and I called it so.

"Why," said the gentleman, "that is the Hudson river."

"Oh, no sir!" I replied politely, but firmly. "You're mistaken. That is the Connecticut river."

The gentleman smiled and said no more. I was not much in the habit, I think, of contradicting my elders; but in this matter I was perfectly sure that I was right and so I thought it my duty to correct the gentleman's geography. I felt rather sorry for him that he should be so ignorant. One day after I reached home, I was looking over my route on the map, and lo! there was Albany standing on the Hudson river, a hundred miles from the Connecticut. Then I did not feel half so sorry for the gentleman's ignorance as I did for my own. I never told anybody that story until I wrote it down on these pages the other day; but I have thought of it a thousand times, and always blush for my boldness. Nor was it the only time that I was perfectly sure of things that really were not so. It is hard for a boy to learn that he may be mistaken; but unless he is a fool, he learns it after a while. The sooner he finds it out the better for him.—Washington Gladden in St. Nicholas for February.

"Ever hear of a man shaving himself with a pumice stone?" asked an Ogden avenue barber yesterday. "There is a carpenter over here on Jane street who has not touched his skin with a razor for six months, yet his face is almost as smooth as a woman's. Three times a week he sits down on the bench in his shop, and, with a piece of pumice stone held lightly between his index finger and thumb, he will slowly rasp the stubble off his chin and chops. He says that he can shave himself in this manner in half the time it would require him with a razor. Talk about there being money in a barber shop! It's all bosh. It won't be long before men will shave themselves with a sponge and cut their hair with an egg-beater.

Rev. Berry Robinson, a colored minister at Fayette, Mo., has adopted the following original marriage service: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven; do you so promise me as to live together in the holy odency of wedlock as Jacob, Isaac and Becky? Give us this day our daily bread, as we forgive our debtors, and I now pronounce you man and wife, and lead us not into temptation, and if there be any man present what objects why these young couples shall not be nited in the holy odency of wedlock let them now forever speak or hold their peace, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, amen!"

In the hotel parlor 11 p. m.—"Have you any idea what time it is?" he asked, after he had talked her to sleep three or four times and waked her up as often by laughing boisterously at his own brilliant ebullitions of wit, humor and burlesque. "Really, I haven't," she replied wearily. "It certainly must be time I was going home," he continued, as he made a move in the right direction. "Oh, I am sure it is very much later than that," she said, sweetly and innocently, and then he went away with a hideous suspicion in his manly bosom.—Washington Critic.

A Little Mistake.—Lena, who has been only a few months from Germany, is very proud of the facility with which she is acquiring the English language. Once in a while, however, when trying to repeat some of the slang phrases used by the boys of the family, she makes a slight mistake. As, for instance, when, after listening with an incredulous smile to a very transparent attempt at a hoax by young John, she exclaimed, "Oh, Master Yonny, dat story is not dick enough."—Harper's Bazar.

Minister (to boy who is digging for worms): "Little boy don't you know it is wrong to work on Sunday, except in cases of necessity?"

Boy (going on with his digging): "This is a case of necessity. A feller can't go fishin' 'thout bait."—Stray.

"No, Bobby," said his mother, "you cannot go skating to day. It's Sunday, you know."

"Well, ma," persisted Bobby, "can't I go if I'll just skate straight ahead, and not try to do any fancy work?"—Puck.

WHAT IS SCROFULA?

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or the many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, proves itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. Some of these cures are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial. Send for book of cures.

MRS. E. S. WEEDEN

DRESSMAKER.

AGENT FOR DEMORESTS' PATTERNS.

Am now ready to commence my Spring work and shall be pleased to see any of my old patrons

The Farm.

A lad went forth from his country home,
With bundle on his back;
And though quite poor, one thing was sure,
Of will there was no lack.
"To seek my fortune, east or west,"
He said, "I merrily go.
The world is wide; and then, beside,
I can plough, and rake, and hoe."

He found himself in the city streets,
Where he ate his oaten bread,
Then sought a store upon whose door
A placard simply read:
"Wanted a Boy. Inquire within."
"Well, sir," said Blank & Co.,
"What can you do to help us through?"
"I can plough, and rake, and hoe."

The merchant smiled at the honest lad.
"And is that all?" he cried.
"No," said the boy, with tongue of joy,
"I can do a 'heap' beside.
I can harrow the ground, sir, all day long,
And scatter the seed, and mow;
I can husk the corn, and thresh, as well
As to plough, and rake, and hoe."

A glow of pride was on his cheek
As he stood there hat in hand,
And sweet content with faith was bent,
That his help was in demand.
"I like your resolution, sir;
You'll do," said Blank & Co.,
"Though we own no field with generous yield,
For to plough, and rake, and hoe."

The will that sent the stripling out
To battle with the strong,
And at the start, kept up his heart,
And guarded him from wrong.
And when in after years his name
Was linked with Blank & Co.,
He blessed the day he came that way,
For to "plough, and rake, and hoe."

A TEST OF LOVE.

It had blown a perfect hurricane all day, and early in the afternoon the snow had commenced to fall, increasing in violence until at 6 o'clock, when Lottie started home, Tottenham court-road and the by-streets were full of drifts, the air was a blinding haze, and the wind fiercer than ever.

"Oh, how pleasant home will look!" she said to herself, pulling her collar up about her ears, and tucking her music-roll securely under her arm. "How happy I ought to be that I have it to go to, even though it is a little room all to myself! What do poor girls do who have none, no work, no home—and no Robert?"

Then she laughed shyly to herself, and blushed—a happy, rosy blush down inside the collar, and walked faster than ever.

Home was quite a distance, but her fleet steps carried her quickly there, and the hall door had flown open in response to her latch-key, when, from somewhere in the darkness near, a voice came—a tremulous, pleading voice,—"Pity, oh, for the love of God, pity me!"

"Who are you? Where are you?" asked Lottie, startled, and stopping right where the hall light shone in her face and dazzled her eyes.

"Here." And from the shadow beside the door rose a woman's figure—a woman that the next moment also stood in the light, showing a wrinkled, aged face and snow-white hair, covered with a tattered bit of shawl. "I am freezing, starving, and may be dying. If you have any pity give me some food and some kind of shelter!" she said, with a desperate sort of famished eagerness.

"I will—oh, I will—come in," cried Lottie, her voice quivering and her eyes shining with the generous pity that flooded her young heart. "I have no place I can take you but up to my room on the top floor. Can you climb the stairs?"

"For warmth and food? Yes, yes; lead the way," cried the woman eagerly, looking at the girl with a trembling delight burning in her hollow eyes. "I can follow anywhere."

But she was aged and weak, and the four long flights of stairs were slowly accomplished, Lottie assisting her companion as well as the narrow staircase would allow, and going very slowly.

"This is my room," she exclaimed at last, throwing open a door and leading the panting woman in. "Sit down here, and in two minutes my fire will be lighted. Are you very tired?"

The weary woman could only nod as she sank into the chair Lottie gave, while her young hostess flew about the room.

Everything was most exquisitely neat, and the little grate, brushed and polished, was already laid for the fire, and, at a touch from Lottie's match, blazed and crackled with amazing brightness.

"Is not that lovely?" she cried, turning to her strange visitor. "Now you will soon be warm, and in a few minutes I will give you a cup of tea. Move nearer, won't you?"

Apparently speechless with grateful amazement and delight the woman did as she was bid, throwing off her wet, tattered shawl, and holding her wrinkled hands over the blaze, while her eager eyes still followed every move Lottie made.

"I am my own housekeeper, you see," continued the girl gaily, as if wishing to make her visitor less timid and more at home, "here is my little kitchen," and with a merry laugh she threw open the door to a large closet, showing within two neatly-papered shelves of dishes and tins. "I am just as happy and independent as I can be. How do like it?"

"Like it!" echoed the woman; "does it not look like heaven to me! But are you all alone?"

"Yes, all alone. I have not a relative in the world that I know of," said Lottie, taking off and hanging up her things, now that she had all things started. "I would be very lonesome if I had the time, but I haven't."

"Then you work—you are poor?" cried the woman, as though the surroundings were to her suggestive of wealth and ease.

"Oh, yes, I am poor; and yet I am rich, for I have health and strength and good work," said Lottie, with a world of thankfulness thrilling her blithe voice. "In the morning I am up early and arrange my room and fire and have my little breakfast; then I am away all day as nursery governess and music teacher in a great house near South Park. I never have time to be lonesome, and I am very happy."

The woman turned her eyes to the fire again, and as she steadily and silently watched the dancing flames Lottie seized the opportunity of looking at her closely, when the woman turned, almost sharply.

"You were studying me. What do you think?"

"Oh—why—I—I—was wondering—if you had always been so poor," stammered Lottie, honest but embarrassed.

The woman laughed, and not unmusically.

"No," she said, "I was not. But you are young and I am old, therefore let us talk of you and not of me. Tell me, do you always intend to live so alone—don't you want to marry?"

A wave of color, like the warm tint to a sea-shell, covered Lottie's sweet face.

"I am going to marry very soon," she said, after a moment.

"Are you? And do you mind telling me about it—and him?" questioned the woman.

"He is teaching French and Spanish to the children I am nursery governess to, and we meet there very often. I know he is good and noble, because I do. He shows it in every look and act."

"And you love him?"

"Ah, yes! Yes, indeed!"

Something in the sweet purity and rapt expression of the girl's face made the woman turn suddenly away and wipe her eyes. And then nothing more was said by either until the dainty supper of tea, toast and egg was cooked by Lottie and placed before the woman on a tray, covered with a worn but snowy napkin. Then suddenly came the question, "What are you going to do with me to-night—turn me out?"

"Oh, no, indeed. You shall sleep on my bed, and I can make a pallet here by the fire. My bed is out of sight now," she added, with a laugh, as the woman looked about inquiringly. "I like to have my room a sitting-room, so if any-one comes to see me I fold up my bed into a lounge, and put all my toilet things back of that pretty curtain, and that leaves me a little parlor, you see. Isn't it pleasant?"

The old woman's face was a mystery as she looked and listened. The thin lips continually twitched, and the eyes, with all their sharpness gone, filled with tears. But she asked no more questions.

Lottie ate her own supper, then went into the closet, took down the tiny dish-pan, poured out the water that had been heating while they ate, then quickly cleaned up all signs of supper, working quietly, as she supposed the weary woman was dozing, when, on the contrary, she was intently watching every act of the young housekeeper. Work done, apron was removed, clean cuffs were put on, the soft curls brushed and tastefully tied; then Lottie came to the fire, and seeing her visitor awake, said, "My Robert is coming this evening, and you will see if he is not good and noble-looking."

"He is coming here?—this evening?" exclaimed the woman, starting up. "Then I must go—at once!"

"Indeed, no? Where would you go? You will stay here," said Lottie, with decision; and at that very instant steps sounded on the stairs and through the hall; and she added, with a quick smile, "Here he is now."

Trembling, and evidently at her wits' end, the woman sank back into her seat and while Lottie went to the door and greeted her lover in a few low-spoken words, she sat staring into the fire, a smile gradually breaking over her face, as she though consternation had given way to amusement.

Laying his hat and coat over a chair, Robert Claxton came around to the fire and looked down at the old woman, as she looked up at him; and there was a moment's silence.

"Grandmother?" he exclaimed at last, in a voice of stupefied amazement—"Grandmother, am I dreaming?"

"Well—no—I think not. You don't appear to be," answered she, as though, after all, it was a great joke.

"But you—what—I——"

"Didn't I say I was going to?" asked she, shortly.

"No, you didn't say what; and I never thought——"

"No, I suppose not; but I did. See here, Lottie."

Like one doubting her senses, Lottie had stood listening to the strange dialogue, and even at this peremptory order she had not the power to move.

"This is my grandmother, Lottie," began Robert, as if at a loss how to tell his story.

But she interrupted him briskly.

"I'll tell you about it myself, Lottie," said she. "I am his grandmother, and I am not poor; and no more is he, as he has made you believe. On the contrary, he is to have my money; and I had set my heart on his marrying Maude Dawber—yes, the very young lady where you teach—and he set his heart on finding out for himself what she was like. So I humored him, and he left off his last name, Bennett, and went to the family with a glowing letter of recommendation from me. He was engaged; he saw my pretty Maude in her home, and I need not tell you how he found her to be a shiftless, spoiled beauty. He also saw you, and I could never repeat all his love rhapsodies. I was chagrined that my choice had been found at fault, and determined to discover flaws in his, and—well, I've tried, and failed."

She paused there, and rising suddenly, went to amazed and bewildered Lottie, and took her hand.

"Robert, the girl you love is worthy all you have said and believed of her. She is a pure, true, noble girl, with a heart that you or any man must strive hard to be worthy of. Take her, with the warmest blessing your crusty, doubting grandmother can ask or give."

Tenderly Robert clasped the hands placed in his, and drew her to his breast.

"Lottie, my darling, you forgive us both?"

But from mingled astonishment and joy, Lottie was sobbing and speechless.

"I played the hungry old woman pretty well, I think," said old Mrs. Bennett, complacently, as she sat down by the fire again. "I am old and rather pale, and, of course, the child never guessed I was swathed in thick flannels under all these rags. But, oh, Robert, my boy, you have found a little treasure—you have indeed. Be worthy of her."

"I will try, grandma," he said, tenderly kissing Lottie's blushing, happy face, "every hour of my life."

A NEW SPIRIT MEDIUM.

John Slater, a spiritualist, is making a sensation in Brooklyn by revealing secret things to people in the audiences that gather in Avon hall to witness his "mind-reading." He is the man who proposes to expose Washington Irving Bishop as a bungling trickster. For himself, he claims to have what he tells his hearers from spirits through a spirit whom he calls Falling Water—Indian of course. He stands in full light, on a platform occupied besides by a piano, a cabinet organ and a bunch of flowers. He is a tall, pale, frail young fellow, and his performances are thus described:—

"There is a young man in the audience," he said, pacing up and down the platform, "who is light-fingered. Not long ago he took $1.50 from his employer's drawer. In three weeks he is going to be put away. His initial is H., and his firm's name I know."

"Young man," he continued, pointing his finger to a blonde youth in the gallery, "I hear you talking about Harry. That's Harry behind you, isn't it!"

"Yes," said Harry.

"Well, you came here for devilment, Harry, and I will show you that this is a serious place by warning you about certain things you are doing. You understand?" Harry evidently did, for he blushed and was silent.

Pointing his finger to a young woman in the gallery he said: "You were here once before, and if you remember I described to you a young man who was with you a great deal. You went home and told him what I said; the man whom I saw is by your side now."

The young woman's companion, a bluff, red-faced fellow, burst into amazed laughter. "That's me," he shouted.

"Did I ever see you, or you me before?"

"Never."

"Take out that wallet you have in your inside pocket," said the Spiritualist to a black-haired man who sat below. He then told him how much money was in it.

"Correct," said the man before he had opened it.

"There is a $10 bill there."

The man looked over the money. "You missed it that time," he said with a laugh.

"No, I didn't," said Slater. "I never miss; look again."

He did. "By George," he said, "there is one here."

"I wish to speak with the young lady who wears glasses," said the Spiritalist, turning to another part of the hall, where the reporter sat. "There is one dear to you who has hemorrhages. She coughs, and when the blood comes up she says: 'Oh! it's nothing, it's nothing.' But, God! it's everything."

"My cousin!" gasped the young lady in a frightened whisper, clutching her companion's arm.

"I don't want to frighten you," said the medium; "but you make her take care of herself."

"I see the form of an old man around you," he added to a man in the same part of the house. "He says tell you that he is your grandfather, and that his name is James."

"Well, honestly, I don't know my grandfather's first name."

"You don't? Well, it's your mother's father, and is name is James ——." He gave the rest of the name.

"That is correct."

"Oh, he wants to deliver this message. He says 'baby is all right.'"

"Thank you," said the man. "I am glad to hear that."

"Was I ever in your bedroom?" he asked, turning suddenly to a lady in front of him.

"No, sir," said the lady indignantly.

"Well, I am now. You are stitching on a brown dress and you say, 'It's nothing but stitch, stitch from morning until night.' You have something that looks like a bank-book. You want to hide it. You get up and put it in a work-bag and you put that in the closet. Oh! I see it all, don't I?"

"I think you do," said the lady.

In this way he goes from one to another in the audience with wonderful rapidity, giving "tests" sometimes to from 100 to 200 in a single night. This puts collusion out of the question. To memorialize the string of names, dates, incidents, messages that he pours out would seem utterly impossible. He says he will do Mr. Bishop's feats without the aid of physical contact, and that Henry Guy Carleton will have to get some other theory than unconscious muscular guidance. Even if mind-reading is admitted, other phases will need further explanation.

A hint as how the great fortune of the Astors was accumulated may be had from the sale the other day by that estate of a lot of land in New York for $325,000 which was purchased in 1861 for $18,000. A gold mine could scarcely have done better.

It is claimed that a pail or tub of fresh cold water, renewed several times in the course of twenty-four hours, will absorb all the evil odor of fresh paint in a day or two. In the time of spring cleaning the remedy will be found extremely useful.

"Give me a dude egg, please," said the boarder to the table girl. "A dude egg? What is that?" "A fresh one."—Boston Courier.

"Enough."

I am so weak, dear Lord! I cannot stand
One moment without Thee;
But, oh, the tenderness of Thine enfolding,
And, oh, the faithfulness of Thine upholding,
And, oh, the strength of Thy right hand!
That strength is enough for me.

I am so needy, Lord! and yet I know
All fullness dwells in Thee;
And hour by hour that never-failing treasure
Supplies and fills in overflowing measure,
My least, and greatest need. And so
Thy grace is enough for me.

It is so sweet to trust Thy Word alone,
I do not ask to see
The unveiling of Thy purpose, or the shining
Of future light on mysterious untwining;
Thy promise-roll is all my own—
Thy Word is enough for me.

The human heart asks love. But now I know
That my heart hath from Thee
All real, and full, and marvelous affection;
So near, so human! Yet divine perfection
Thrills gloriously the mighty glow!
Thy love is enough for me.

There were strange soul-depths, restless, vast and broad,
Unfathomed as the sea,
An infinite craving for some infinite stilling;
But now Thy perfect love is perfect filling!
Lord Jesus Christ, my Lord, my God,
Thou, thou art enough for me!

NOT TOO LOUD.

A young man at Sandwich, while out riding with his girl recently, had a runaway, in which the buggy was badly demoralized. Upon being cross-questioned, the youth admitted that he was kissing his girl when the horse started. That is the fatal error the youth of this century is making—he kisses too loud. He should not allow them to explode like a torpedo. It is not only liable to scare the horses and cattle when the smack detonates in this way, but it startles the young lady and makes her shy. There is another danger from audibly firing off these batteries of bliss—old men have wonderfully sharp ears for such things, and they are liable to slip out of the bedroom door in their stocking feet, and then all will be lost. We would advise young men before going courting to practice the art of silent kissing on the baby, or their grandmother, or some person or thing that can spare the time. When you get it down fine you can try it on some girl when the old people are away at a church entertainment or party. Ere long they will have the thing down so fine that the old man may be sitting in the reading room, and as they lounge on the sofa behind him, the youth can reach over and plant one as soft and yielding as a bread and milk poultice square on her rosebud lips. And the old man will keep right on reading the news, wholly unconscious that there has been a just provocation for him to put on his box-toed boots, and to travel on one leg immediately behind the young man clear down to the wicker gate.—Aurora Blade.

A WORD OF CAUTION.

We have to utter a word of caution about the ink pencils which have come so much into vogue lately. A most useful implement to the business men, this innocent looking pencil can be easly converted into a treacherous friend, and on no consideration should be used to write the signature of an yone. The composition of the pencil is a pecular combination, highly poisonous in itself, and—herein lies the danger to signature writers—competent to give off two or more impression on damped paper—not tissue paper, be it understood, but ordinary writing paper. Our attention was first directed to this peculiarity by an astute official of the Bank of New Zealand, and subsequent experiments proved the easy practicability of making a clear copy of the filling in of a cheque with this ink pencil. First the writing of the cheque is transfered—upside down, of course—to a slip of damped paper, and from that transferred—right side up—to another slip of damped paper. We tested this recently in the case of a cheque written with the ink pencil and sent in from the country, and by simple hand pressure obtained a very perfect copy of the transferable parts of the document.—New York Times.

ECONOMY IN SMALL THINGS.

Steady industry and thrift will go far in making an ordinary laborer independent in his means. When a man spends less than he makes, he is on the road to competency, though he may be traveling but slowly. A penny is a small matter, yet the comfort of many families depend upon saving them. It is worth while to attend to the business proverbs of the world. Such as these for instance: "Many a little makes a mickle." Take care of the pennies and the pounds will take care of themselves." A penny saved is a penny gained." If a man allows the little pennies to slip away in the smoke of cigars, or the beer bottle, some this way and some that, he will find that he has lost much in the course of time. On the other hand, if these pennies are carefully laid away, he will soon find that his attention to small matters is enlarging his fund to increase his home comfort. Never be idle; if your hands can find nothing to do cultivate the mind. Keep good company, speak the truth, make few promises, pay as you go, drink no liquor, be kind and polite to all.

If we had paid cash, it would have cost you $2 a yard, madam." Mrs. Brown—"Yes, I know it must be cheaper to buy on time. My husband always tells me to purchase all I can get on credit. I think I'll take sixteen yards, and you can just charge it to Mr. Brown."—Texas Siftings.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 1, 1887.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has appointed Assistant Secretary Fairchild as Secretary of the treasury to succeed Secretary Manning, who resigned on account of the impaired condition of his health.

CARTER HARRISON, the willing instrument with which the lower element in Chicago has been permitted to govern that city for several years past, has declined to accept a renomination on the ground that his candidacy would not be likely to meet with the approval of President Cleveland.

SPRINGFIELD has lost two prominent citizens this week in the death of ex-Mayor Ladd, and Horace Kibbe, the well known candy manufacturer. Mr. Henry S. Lee, treasurer of the Springfield Institution for Savings' was reported to be dangerously sick in the early part of the week, but his recovery is now regarded as certain.

THE difficulty in securing a Recorder for the District of Columbia, which it took the President so long to overcome, has seemed, until within a few days, more than likely to present itself again in view of the sudden and serious illness of Mr. Trotter. Later advices, however, happily indicate that there is no immediate danger of another vacancy in this important office.

EXTENSIVE petroleum fields have recently been discovered in the Baku district, in the region of the Caspian sea. At about the same time it was discovered that the agents of the Standard Oil Company were already on hand, prepared to establish the same greedy and powerful monopoly which has enabled that company to control the oil product of this country for so many years.

OUR General Court is again illustrating its proficiency in the delicate duties of midwifery by its long and patient service at the birth of Beverly Farms. The child is a wee bit of a thing to be sure, but it has caused a vast amount of trouble, as well as the expenditure of large sums of money. However, its Boston godfathers are said to be delighted with it, and there would seem to be no end to the wealth they are prepared to lavish upon it.

THE Legislature is again feeding the temperance people with a spoon. The House of Representatives has passed, by a handsome majority, a bill which limits liquor licenses to one for every 500 inhabitants. Very good, but the law should further provide—for the protection of the licensee, and to give all the thirsty mortals an equal chance—that no customer should have the right to demand a drink oftener than, say once in fifteen minutes. Nothing would then remain but to hang the prohibition-in-the-constitution resolve up so high that it won't be seen nor heard of again until the Republican convention meets next fall.

A DR. ALBRECHT of Boston has been bucking the tiger in that city until, as the story goes, he has been relieved of quite a sum of money. Last Monday, while visiting the den, the doctor became suddenly suspicious that the proprietors were not men of the highest integrity—in fact he became convinced that they had played a dishonest game. A serious alteration arose, the doctor fired several shots from his revolver, and the men who so grossly betrayed his confidence retired permanently from their nefarious business. The doctor is only 30 years of age, but short as his life has been it seems to be generally agreed that he has not lived wholly in vain. If he will study to avoid such serious complications in the future, and administer his pills in a way less certain to insure a fatal result, nothing but the hangman's rope seems likely to cut him off from a career of remarkable promise.

THE recommendation of the special committee on the revision of our judiciary system that the constitution be so amended as to limit the tenure of office of the judges of our inferior courts to six years, has just been considered in the Senate and rejected by a large vote. The life-tenure theory, which has prevailed in this state so long, seems to be too deeply rooted to make it probable that any proposition for a change will be favorably received by the people for some time to come. This fact serves to emphasize the importance of appointing to these positions only men of undoubted capacity and fitness, who have a high sense of the responsible duties they are called upon to perform, and who have no object to attain except to see that the ends of justice are at all times faithfully served. Whenever a judicial office is once properly filled there is no danger that the occupant will remain in it too long, or that the security which he feels can possibly work to the disadvantage of any public interest.

AN unusually large number of cities and towns in this commonwealth are this spring recording their votes in favor of prohibition. In view of this fact it would seem to be a wise and judicious thing for the Republican party to consider how much it would be likely to gain in popular favor by a courageous move in the direction of more stringent prohibitory legislation. The strongest, and practically the only argument that has heretofore been urged in favor of a merely restrictive policy is that it is the only one which public sentiment will sustain. That public sentiment, as recently expressed, is in favor of the most efficient measures for the suppression of the liquor traffic, would seem to be too clearly shown to admit of any reasonable doubt. It is certainly to the credit of our state that the better instincts of her people have at last begun to assert themselves. Massachusetts belongs in the ranks of the prohibition states, and whenever she is placed elsewhere she is unmistakably in a false position. Whenever she starts in the wrong direction it only requires a few years of free rum to turn her into the true path again. This is evidently a favorable time for the enactment of a law by which temperance and sobriety will be effectually promoted in all parts of the state alike. Verily the party which professes to have in its exclusive keeping the good name and fame of the commonwealth should realize that it is confronted with an important duty which it cannot afford much longer to neglect.

A number of good entries are already announced.

The adjourned town meeting comes next Monday, and the temperance people will do well to be on hand early if they expect to complete the good work begun two weeks ago, and make any provision for the prosecuting of illegal liquor sellers. The license party will make a strong effort to vote down this article in the warrant, and unless the friends of the cause are promptly on hand, they will surely get "left."

Postmaster Brown assumed the responsibilities of his new position this morning, though no change was made in the working force of the office. Mr. Knox still remains and will probably be a permanent fixture, even should the office be moved. A great many have expressed the wish that it might be moved to the vacant store next Commercial block, doing away with the present crowd of loafers about the corner of its present location, but Mr. Brown is determined to do that which will give satisfaction to the greater portion of the community, and will not make the first move in the matter, though a petition for a change would undoubtedly be favorably considered and granted.

An alarm of fire was sounded last Saturday afternoon about four o'clock by a slight blaze on the roof of a horse shed at the Palmer iron foundry. The fire was first seen by Section Foreman McQuaid and his men, on the Boston and Albany tracks, and was easily put out before the apparatus arrived. The need of a better fire alarm was also shown at this fire, as the hose cart, etc., was half way to the foundry when the alarm was rung. The hook and ladder truck was badly damaged on its way back to the house. It was fastened behind a buggy, when the thills dropped down and stuck in the mud, raising the front of the truck some distance from the ground and dropping it with such force as to break several parts.

With this number the JOURNAL begins a new volume, No. 38. During the last year it has endeavored to give its readers a greater amount of local news than formerly, and thinks they will acknowledge that it has succeeded. During the past twelve months it has published over three hundred and twenty-five columns of local news, or an average of nearly six and one-half columns each issue, a record which it ventures to assert few Massachusetts local papers can beat. Its readers appreciate this, and during 1887 they will be given a still larger amount. A special feature of the coming year will be a series of articles on the early history of Palmer, treating of men and things in those days, and which will prove exceedingly interesting. The first paper will be published in a few weeks, and regularly thereafter.

The consecration meeting of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor will be held next Sunday evening at 6 o'clock. Subject, "God's Promises." The Home Missionary offering will be dropped in the box at the door. Services for the raising of the debt of the Home Missionary Society were held in almost all the Congregational churches last Sunday, and these had marked effect when the contribution box was passed. This was notably the case at the First church in Springfield, where $186 was raised in addition to the $125 previously raised among the young people of the church. The South church raised their subscription to $180 and the North church to over $200. The Oregon City church of Oregon, which has only 25 members, has sent $25. The amounts of the other churches which have contributed are as follows: Ludlow, $44; Spencer, $58; Sunderland, $50.

She leaves a desolate home, a stricken husband and many mourning friends and relatives.

The committee have acceded to their wish, and consequently a town meeting will be held next Monday to see what action the town will take in regard to building a school house of its own. Joy's Hall is secured for the next term of school. The cause of this trouble is a failure on the part of the committee to recognize Miss Matterson as principal. The town sustains the committee.

Since the unfortunate memorial hall affair came up two years ago our town has not lacked matters of interest about town meeting time, and this year is no exception. The warrant had twenty-two articles, and the band is expected to play when the last one is reached, if not before. It is to see if the town will take action regarding the claim of C. E. Peck against the town. The claim has not been made public, but is supposed to be for work under the alleged contract which was thrown up by the town a year ago, or for damages on account of the same, or for both. The Republican caucus at Music Hall Thursday evening provided a ticket for the south village, and the "citizens" at Liberty Hall Friday night looked after the interests of the north end, and a good time is expected Monday for those who like it. The Union correspondent says several men have agreed to do all they can to carry the town for no license, and from the fact that there are never more than a dozen or twenty yes votes cast, there is ground for the hope that their efforts will be successful.

The ladies of the M. E. Church had an oyster supper and concert at their church Wednesday evening. Music was furnished by Danforth & Thompson's orchestra, singing by Mrs. Norcross, Miss Feather, Chas. Orcutt, and others.

The new academy building was opened last Wednesday for the reception of pupils, and though not completed in all its details, will be much more pleasant than the contracted and inconvenient rooms used during the erection of the new edifice.

Rev. D. Fraser's subject last Sunday evening was "Hagar in the Wilderness." After relating her experience he stated there were too many Hagars in our own days, who go from comfortable homes to live wretched lives with husoands who have become victims of the intoxicating cup. The fearful condition into which many pure and innocent girls have been led was pictured out as a warning to others.

A few years ago the competition for the hearse service in town was so great that proposals were received by the selectmen, which resulted in reducing the price from $2.50 to 99 cents per trip. Proposals for printing town reports this year were received and the price reduced from $1.50 per page to $1, although at the former price 750 copies were printed and only 600 copies bid for this year, which makes quite a difference.

Unless all the signs fail, there will be a bitter fight at the polls next Monday between the friends of license and the friends of temperance. The license party has been working hard but secretly, getting men to register who have not voted before for years, has spent money freely, and boasts that it has made lots of voters this year. The temperance people will need to be on their guard next Monday, or they will be defeated for the first time in a good many years.

The choir of St. Paul's church, Palmer, assisted by Henry F. Trask of Springfield, tenor, and Miss Mabel L. Barnes of West Brookfield, pianist, is to give a concert at Central Hall next Wednesday evening, rendering the same programme as at Palmer February 11th, and at West Brookfield March 16th. This programme, which consists of songs, duetts, quartettes and a piano solo, is spoken very highly of, both by the press and public, as being classical and very pleasing, and Monson people may be sure of a fine entertainment, which with the low price of 25 cents admission ought to call out a full house.

At a special meeting of the Congregational church last Thursday evening to act on the resignation of Rev. Mr. Byington, after accepting the resignation the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in accepting the resignation of our pastor, Rev. E. H. Byington, we desire to put on record our appreciation of his excellent ability and faithfulness as a preacher of the pure gospel and a teacher of sound doctrine; of his kind offices as pastor to us, who in seasons of affliction among his people has found his way to many hearts; as a scholarly and cultured man, interested in promoting the intelligence of our community, and as a citizen interested in all things.

Resolved, That we gratefully record his labors for the past seven years among us as those of an able minister of the gospel who, blessed with an unusual degree of vitality and uniform and vigorous health, has accomplished much in building up the Spiritual Kingdom of our Lord and Redeemer.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the records, and a copy thereof furnished to the pastor.

A few days ago, when Rev. D. Fraser stepped of the train in Orleans, Mass., he was asked by a young man if he were "the minister who was going to preach to-morrow," and receiving an answer in the affirmative he invited Mr. Fraser into his sleigh. When they had gone about half a mile Mr. Fraser suspected something was wrong and informed his young brother that he was a Universalist minister. "A Universalist minister!" cried the young man in astonishment, "I was sent after the Congregational minister. What shall I do?" "Drive right back to the depot and you will find the minister waiting for you," answered Mr. Fraser. When they reached the depot they found the orthodox minister and the Universalist friend who came after Mr. Fraser discussing what they should do. Had Mr. F. said nothing he would have been in a few moments comfortably seated in the house of the orthodox deacon, but soon everything was explained and each one went on his way rejoicing.

The following letter addressed to one of our fire insurance agents, may be of interest to our citizens, and should awake an interest on a subject of such vital importance to our community:

SPRINGFIELD, Mass, March 30, 1887.

F. C. Morris, Esq.:

DEAR SIR.—The fact that Monson is very deficient in facilities for extinguishing fires has become well known, and is the cause of much solicitude to insurance companies, and while it is the wish and desire of the various companies to furnish protection to the people of the villages as far as they prudently can, yet it is not fair toward other towns and villages that have, with commendable enterprise, introduced modern appliances for protection against fire, that insurance rates should remain as low in Monson, and the opinion is freely expressed by many insurance companies that unless some system of water works shall soon be introduced in your village, common prudence and fairness would seem to dictate that a readjustment of the rates of insurance must be made. The growing frequency of sweeping fires in towns where no water works or organized fire department exist is a constant menace to capital so situated, and not only operates to prevent new capital from seeking such localities, but it is also a notice to insurance companies to avoid business at such points unless at greatly increased rates. Monson is admirably situated to secure an abundance of good water, both for public and domestic purposes at comparatively little expense, and it is the hope of this committee that your public spirited citizens will at once avail themselves of the natural advantages presented and provide a system of water works which shall not only obviate the necessity for an advance in rates, but also place Monson among the enterprising towns of the state that are moving in this matter, and certainly in the near future save your village from a most disastrous conflagration which would be a severe blow to your industries.

Yours truly,

B. R. STILLMAN,
Chairman Rating Committee N. E. Exchange.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, March 30th, 1887.

Yesterday afternoon the railroad committee, by Representative John C. Crosby of Pittsfield, reported in the House the following bill of special interest to Palmer:

SECTION 1. The Boston and Albany Railroad Company shall construct and maintain a footway or other additional approach to its station in the town of Palmer, for the accommodation of persons traveling on foot between said station and Main street in said town. The board of railroad commissioners, after hearing all persons interested, shall order and determine the location and manner of the construction thereof, but no such footway or other approach to said station shall cross the tracks of said company at grade.

SECT. 2. The cost of the construction of said footway or other approach shall be borne by said company.

SECT. 3. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

The bill met no opposition in the House on its first stage this afternoon.

On Thursday there was received in the Senate a continuance of the sensational scheme (which yet is meant in sober earnest) of tunnelling Boston Common and Beacon Hill. It was a petition for leave to put railroad tracks on the Boylston and Tremont street malls temporarily, their permanency to be decided by popular vote at the next city election. To that petition were signed many well-known Boston names, including S. D. Warren, Robert Treat Paine, Alpheus Hardy, Joshua M. Sears, Francis Parkman and William Endicott, Jr. The petition was admitted, and in the House the petition of the West End street railway company for leave to tunnel the common was admitted without a word of debate or opposition.

The dentistry bill was engrossed by the Senate Thursday, thus completing its passage of both houses.

A bill was reported in the Senate Thursday to allow electric light and power to be supplied by gas companies. The business is to be under the supervision of the gas commissioners.

A sharp debate in the House all Thursday afternoon upon the bill to allow women to vote on the issue of liquor licenses resulted in a vote of 60 yeas to 45 nays on ordering to a third reading.

The contest between the tax payers and the assessors is still going on. One of the matters before the taxation committee is a bill to provide that all goods in the process of manufacture shall be taxed where they are on May 1st. The object of the bill is to hit the leather men of Boston, who have manufactories in the suburbs, whose leather is not taxed in Boston because it is not there and the assessors cannot find it, and it is not taxed in the towns, because the owners do not live there. The Peabody assessors say that several hundred thousand dollars' worth of leather escapes taxation every year in that town in that way. A bill is pending in the House to compel persons to disclose their personal property to the assessor.

Mr. Howe's guide board bill was at last received by the House as a reasonably necessary measure, and it was on Friday passed to be engrossed with but little opposition, but the Senate killed it to-day, 14 to 15.

Debate on the employer's liability bill has been assigned by the House to April 6th, and there will be more talk over it than there was in the Senate.

On Monday there was reported in the Senate by Senator Phillips of Hampden, the entire revision of the insurance laws of the state which was ordered by the Legislature of 1886. It was prepared by Commissioner Tarbox from the present laws with such changes as he thought should be made. Upon some of the new features which he introduced there was a sharp fight by the insurance companies, and on the same matters which they opposed Mr. Tarbox most persistently, they carried the committee with them. He proposed a change to prevent mutual fire companies from accumulating a large surplus, but they are allowed to accumulate 20 per cent of the net profits on their investments. He proposed a radical change in valuing the assets of life companies, but it was not adopted, as the companies held that it would make the soundest company liable to appear insolvent. Another change he proposed was to allow the person insured by a life policy to change the beneficiary either by an act of his own, or by his will. This was rejected entirely by the committee. The bill has begun its passage and bids fair to go through both branches without opposition. A change of household importance is that it allows the use of kerosene stoves without any stipulation to that effect in the policies, which cannot now be done.

Another important bill reported in the Senate Monday allows savings banks to invest in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad company incorporated in any New England state which is in possession of and operating its road, and has paid regular dividends the past ten years, or in first mortgage bonds guaranteed by such company, or in the notes of citizens giving such security as collateral, the notes to be payable on demand and not to exceed 80 per cent of the face value of the security. The bill came to the House Tuesday from the labor committee unanimously. It makes the first Monday of September a legal holiday, by the name of "Labor's Holiday," just the same as the Fourth of July is a holiday.

Changes are proposed in the arbitration law, the most important of which is a provision for local boards of arbitration to be created by the parties to a dispute to be independent of the state board.

An expedient has been reported by the railroad committee on compelling railroad companies to use improved fire extinguishing apparatus in all their passenger cars.

The chief debate of Tuesday in the House was on the bill to limit to one in 500 people the number of liquor licenses to be issued to any town or city. Mr. Fisk of Boston (where the ratio is now 1 to 158) tried to have 250 fixed as the limit for his city, but the house voted it down. All the afternoon was consumed in a long and interesting debate, and then the vote was 131 for the bill to 64 against it. Messrs. Taft of Palmer, Robinson of Ware and Brockbank of Monson all voted for the bill. Only one Republican in the five Western counties—Mr. Wood of Chicopee—voted against it.

On Wednesday the Senate took up the constitutional amendment to limit to seven years the terms of justices in the inferior courts of the state. Senator Reed of Lenox was in charge, and he insisted that the change was necessary in order to keep the bench free from incompetent judges, not from age or incapacity. Senators Sewell and Forbes of Worcester and Hoar of Hampshire opposed the change, saying that judges liable to lose their office would be less impartial, and that good behavior is the best ground for tenure. By a vote of 10 yeas to 20 nays and three pairs the Senate refused to order the resolve to a third reading.

It appears that last year Senator Forbes of Worcester and Representative Warden of Waltham (both in this Legislature) and Representatives Woodbury of Oxford and Allen of Oakham paid into the treasury the $100 extra salary the House voted itself.

Wednesday afternoon the House engrossed the Sunday bill, after amending it in important respects. It allows letting of horses and boats, the making of butter and cheese, the keeping open of barber shops from 6 o'clock and of bakers till ten and from 4 to 6 30 p. m. It puts no restriction upon the preparation or sale of Sunday newspapers. People observing Saturday can work Sunday, but not keep open shop. The bill now goes to the Senate.

A correspondent asks: "Where can we send to get Peck's Patent Ear Drums, and invention for enabling people to hear who are deaf, slightly or otherwise?" Write to F. Hiscox, 853 Broadway, N. Y., stating cause and particulars of your deafness and he will give you all the points desired. Read the following from the Medical Record: "A lecturer in one of our hospitals, while illustrating progress in medical science, introduced a deaf patient whose case baffled all medical skill and was considered hopeless. But an invention belonging to F. Hiscox, New York, having been recommended it was used with very satisfactory results, as it fully restored the hearing. It was tested in other cases and found to be more successful than any known device for the relief of deafness, as hearing lost for many years was fully restored by it. This invention is all the more satisfactory as it is out of sight and does not require to be held in position. And while it can be readily removed or inserted by the patients themselves it is withal curative in action and comfortable to wear.

Renews Her Youth.

Mrs. Phœbe Chesley, Peterson, Clay Co., Iowa, tells the following remarkable story, the truth of which is vouched for by the residents of the town: "I am 73 years old, have been troubled with kidney complaint and lameness for many years; could not dress myself without help. Now I am free from all pain and soreness, and am able to do all my own housework. I owe my thanks to Electric Bitters for having renewed my youth, and removed completely all disease and pain." A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, schr. Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and N. Y., had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only gave him instant relief, but allayed the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were similarly affected and a single dose had the same happy effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the standard remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner.

FREE TRADE.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

FIVE PER CENT
REGISTERED AND COUPON WATER WORKS TRUST BONDS
OF THE
NATIONAL WATER WORKS INVESTMENT COMPANY,
NEW YORK.
Capital, $500,000.

Secured by the pledge of Six Per Cent Water Bonds deposited with the Farmer's Loan & Trust Co.

DIRECTORS.

George F. Baker, President First National bank, New York.

C. C. Pomeroy, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.

E. W. Clark, of Messrs. E. W. Clark & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

H. C. Fahnestock, Vice-President First National bank, New York.

F. M. Colston, of Messrs. Wilson, Colston & Co., Baltimore, Md.

Theodore C. Woodbury, of Messrs. Woodbury & Moulton, Portland, Me.

Archer N. Martin, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.

These bonds, the direct obligation of the National Water Works Investment Company, have the following advantages to investors:

First—As security, a direct charge against the capital of The National Water Works Investment company, amounting to $500,000.

Second—The benefit of the trained talent, experience and judgment of the experts employed by The National Water Works Investment company and the business judgment of its Directors.

Third—Constantly-increasing security. The municipalities, either directly or otherwise, make such contracts with the water-works companies as to give them practically the exclusive right to supply water. Every increase in the population increases the demand for water, and the consequent revenue of the company; as the city grows, therefore, the revenue of the water company and the security of these bonds correspondingly increase.

Fourth—The company sees that, as greater security to the bonds which it purchases, assignments are made by the local water company directly to a trust company of the revenue delivered from the city for fire protection, etc., for the benefit of the bondholders, so that the investor will have the further security of the municipal obligations in addition to that of the local company and that of The National Water Works Investment company.

These bonds will, therefore, combine the advantages of Municipal Obligation. Direct Obligation of The Local Water Works company and the Absolute Obligation of The National Water Works Investment company.

It is believed that these securities are an absolutely safe investment, based on an element vital to the existence of every community, secured by most stringent provisions for the protection of the investor, and having the additional advantages of ready convertibility.

These bonds are for sale in denominations of $1000, $500 and $100, by

Springfield Republican.

DAILY, $8; SUNDAY, $2; WEEKLY, $1.

The Republican aims to be a newspaper in the broadest and highest sense. It prints all the legitimate news of the day without fear and favor, unembarassed by personal or partisan obligations, and in compact, well arranged form. Its facilities for gathering and publishing the news are unsurpassed outside of the largest cities, and are constantly improving.

The Republican is distinctively a New England newspaper, although its reputation is national. Its local field embraces not only Springfield but all of Western Massachusetts, Northern Connecticut and Southern Vermont, and the news of this section it presents with great care and fullness. In no other journal can the dwellers in this region find so complete a daily record of home affairs.

It is not merely a journal of news, but undertakes to instruct and entertain its readers by the publication of a rich variety of literature and miscellaneous matter, embracing home and foreign correspondence, stories, poetry, book reviews and notices, religious selections and discussions, special articles and compilations for the farmer and mechanic, for women and children, dramatic, art and society notes, etc.

The Weekly Republican

Contains the cream of the seven Daily issues carefully edited and arranged in compact form. It is an admirable newspaper for farmers and all others who are unable to read the Daily and Sunday editions and costs only one dollar a year, or ten cents a month for shorter periods; 3 cents a copy.

Yes, I know it's awful nice
In the window here, from the others away,
With a taste now and then of the ice,
And now and then of—O, you wretch!
It wasn't at all required
That you should illustrate thus with a sketch
The speech that of course you admired.

"No matter how naughty. There! you have spoiled
The 'classical Grecian knot'
In which you like my hair to be coiled,
And I really don't know what
Other mischief you haven't done! You're just
Real naughty! You squeeze like a vise!
Why can't you men take something on trust,
And be more dainty and nice?

"There, I'm ready, now. What just once more?
Oh! ain't you a darling tease?
And love me so?—one, two, three, four!
There, come now, dearest, please!

The kisses upon them."—"No, not there;
But, sweet, in your own eyes, maybe."

A Burlington woman keeps strict account of every time she spanks her children. She enters it in her diary in this form: "Given under my hand this—th day of ———."—Burlington Free Press.

Tender-hearted young lady: "Oh, you cruel, heartless little wretch! to rob those poor birds of their eggs." Wicked little boy: "Ho! That's the old one that you've got on your bonnet. Guess she won't care."—Stray.

An Illinois paper has the following: "The funeral services of the late William P. Lewis were somewhat hurried to enable his estimable and grief-stricken widow to catch the 2 o'clock train for Chicago, where she goes to visit friends."—Puck.

Talmage said in his lecture, the other night, that "the man who can sing and won't sing should be sent to Sing Sing." That would be too severe. It is the man who can't sing and will sing who should be sent to Sing Sing. P. S.—For 99 years.—Norristown Herald.

Young Hobsonby, in Harlem cigar store—Have you the Rosa Perfecto Cabana Victoria cigar? Dealer, respectfully—No—no, sir, but we have the Carissima Caramba y Los Angelos Ypsilanti brand. Young Hobsonby—How much are they? Dealer—Two for five.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Gabbleton—"Oh! Mr. Fogg, I saw your wife in Biasfold's store, yesterday, and she did look perfectly lovely." Fogg—"Don't you know, my dear madam, that everything looks more attractive in the store than it does after you have got it home?"—Boston Transcript.

Thompson Street Echoings.—Mr. Sims.—Look a heah, yo' brack trash! W-what d'yo' go fer ter tell 'Rastus Cluff dat I hed a mon'tous big mout fer? Mr. Rasher—Did'n say no sech fing, Bre'r Sims. Dey wuz a talkin' down ter de large 'bout puttin' in a new cis'n, en I jes said dey' bettah see you 'bout it. Da's all.—Puck.

Young man (whispering to jeweler)—That engagement ring I bought of you yesterday—

Jeweler—What's the matter with it; didn't it fit?

Young man (cautiously)—Sh! It didn't have a chance. Gimme collar buttons for it.—Puck.

A clerk in a United States pension office said that it was his rule to believe every person who came in was a liar. "Hard?" he exclaimed, "You wouldn't think so if you had our experience. Perjury is nothing to what people will do to get pensions that don't belong to them. You wouldn't suppose that a great many women, for the sake of $8 a month, would turn their marriage into adultery—illegalize their married relations and their children. Well, I'd be willing to bet that there are 10,000 such cases. It happens in this way: A pension to a soldiers' widow ceases when she remarries. But of course the law takes no notice of any irregular relations which she may enter to. So if she is willing to do without ceremony, and thus really fail to become the lawful wife of her new consort, she can continue to draw her pension money. Periodically she must come to this or some other pension office and make oath that she is not a wife. I have frequently known her to bring along her children when she makes this shameful avowal. Astonishing isn't it!"

"Mine fren,'" said a Georgia merchant to a drummer who used to frolic with him, after the former had compromised all around at 30 cents on the dollar and gained a year to wipe up the business, "I'm goin' ter make of you er—vot you call him—er—brevered greditor. How vos dot?" "Thanks old fellow, thanks! I knew you wouldn't go back on me. How are you going to arrange it?" The merchant led him aside. "Vel," said he, closing one eye, I vant to tell you rite now dot nobody vas gointer got er cent outer diz pizness." "And you call this making me a preferred creditor?" The drummer's eyes could have been knocked off with a stick. "Vy not? You know all about id now, but dem odder vellers von't find id out for er year."—Wall Street News.

One of the milestones which once extended along the old Boston road in a series from New York through the New England States to Boston still stands on the Bowery. It bears the inscription, "One mile from the City Hall."

SAVED FROM THE WRECK.

If the delicate organization of woman gets out of order, prompt application of remedial agents is required to save it from total wreck. In all such cases, whether to assist nature in the discharge of her functions, or to repair damages caused by diseases of special organs, there is no remedy so mild, and yet so effective, as Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," prepared at the World's Dispensary, at Buffalo, N. Y., and administered for many years to thousands of patients with the happiest results.

Every recommendation published in praise of Dr. Seth Arnold's Cough Killer, as the great remedy for coughs, colds, etc., etc., is guaranteed genuine by the proprietors of this wonderful medicine. Watch for them in the issues of this paper. For sale by all druggists. Price, 35c., 50c., and $1.00 per bottle.

For costiveness, billiousness, headache, and all feverish habits, use Dr. Seth Arnold's Bilious Pills. 25c.

A TALKING MACHINE.

A new invention, called the graphophone, seems likely to overshadow the utility of its predecessor with the revised name of phonograph. Its construction is the work of Mr. Sumner Taintor, Prof. Alexander G. Bell, the inventor of the Bell telephone, and Dr. Chichcestor Bell, a prominent chemist. The graphophone is very simple, receiving the sound waves from the voice on a small preparation of wax and paraffine by means of a small point attached to the diaphragm of the machine. This wax and paraffine cylinder can then be utlized at any time to grind out a repetition of the songs, laughs, whistles or speeches stamped upon it. It is reported to have worked very satisfactorily, and stenographers think that it will work a revolution in their business by doing away with the need of amanuenses. Two people miles apart, in business or social connection, by possessing each a machine, can send the wax cylinder through the mail, and so converse with one another, while the probability of the price being low will make the graphophone easily obtainable.

FOR GIRLS ONLY.

Suppose, young warm-hearted girls, that, as you lean upon the broad shoulder in the half-lit up parlor, thinking how nice it is to have some one fond and protecting, and how dear you seem to be to him—suppose you should be made aware of all the cheeks that had rested on that shoulder, and all the forms that arm had enclosed? It is fortunate that you don't know these things. It might lead you, however, to keep yourself more sacred for some one who will love you as you do this man, who "takes life as it comes," and by force of habit if not by inclination, could not remember any woman six months if his happiness depended upon it. You ought to allow no personal freedom from gentlemen of your acquaintance. If a finger is put out to examine a locket or chain on your dress, draw back and take it off for inspection, if you choose. The reason for this rule is clear to those who come to twenty-five years of age. A girl who protects herself from the freedom so much in vogue in society increases her own value, if she only knew it, with those she may have to repulse.

BILLS OF LADING IN 1785.

The form of the bills of lading as used a century ago reads rather quaintly now, as will be seen by the following:

"Shipped, by the grace of God, in good order and well conditioned, by Messers. H. Vanderbug & Co., in & upon the good Brigg called Betsy and Sulky, whereof Giles Holister is master, under God for the present voyage, and now riding at anchor in the port of Newburn, and by God's grace bound for New York, 417 bbls. of Tar; 46 bbls Turpentine; 44 bbls. Pitch; 6 Venison Hams; 4 Deer Skins; & one bbl. of Fat, to be delivered in good order unto Mr. Hamtramock, or to his assigns, he or they paying freight, with primage & average accustomed—In witness whereof &c—and so God send the good ship to her destined Port in sofety. AMEN. Dated at Newburn, 16th Feb., 1865. GILES HOLLISTER."

ABOUT WATERING PLANTS.

Unless one has an abundant supply of water, so that its use, when once begun, can be continued, it is better, as a general thing, to not water at all. In the drouth which we so generally have this month, a mere sprinkling of the leaves is worse than no watering at all. Still, we all may have in the vegetable as well as in the flower garden certain plants that we would like to favor. In such cases, instead of watering the plant, the water should be applied to the soil; draw the earth away from the plants, forming a sort of basin around them; then pour on water gradually, and let it soak in around the roots. Afterwards return the removed dry earth to its place, and this will act as a mulch to keep the roots moist.—American Agriculturist.

TAUGHT BY EXPERIENCE.—'I am a lawyer's daughter, you know, George dear,' she said, after George had proposed and had been accepted, 'and you wouldn't think it strange if I were to ask you to sign a little paper to the effect that we are engaged, would you?'

George was too happy to think of anything strange just then, and he signed the paper with a trembling hand and bursting heart.

Then she laid her ear against his middle vest button and they were happy, very happy.

'Tell me darling,' said George after a long, delicious silence, 'why did you want me to sign that paper? Do you not repose implicit confidence in my love for you?'

'Ah, yes,' she sighed with infinite content, 'indeed I do; but George, dear, I have been fooled so many times!'

A patrolman on Woodward avenue had directed him to an undertaker's establishment, and when he met him again half an hour later he asked:

"Well, did you find the place?"

"Yes, but he's no sort of a man."

"What's the matter?"

"Why, the man I wanted a coffin for had but one leg, and this feller wouldn't make a durned cent's difference in the price!"—Detroit Free Press.

The art of killing is becoming expensive. In 1856 in France the cost of the best cannon was $550, and the cost of a single discharge was $3. Now the most expensive siege guns cost $97,500, and one discharge costs $935.

Left Alone at Eighty.

What did you say, dear—breakfast?
Somehow I've slept too late;
You are very kind, dear Effie;
Go, tell them not to wait.

I'll dress as quick as ever I can,
My old hands tremble sore,
And Polly, who used to help, dear heart!
Lies t'other side o' the door.

Put up the old pipe, deary,
I couldn't smoke to-day;
I'm sort o' dazed and frightened,
And don't know what to say.

It's lonesome in the house, here,
And lonesome out o' door—
I never knew what lonesome meant,
In all my life, before.

The bees go humming, the whole day long,
And the first June rose has blown,
And I am eighty, dear Lord, to-day—
Too old to be left alone!

Oh, heart of love, so still and cold,
Oh, precious lips, so white—
For the first sad hours in sixty years,
You were out of my reach, last night.

You've cut the flower. You're very kind.
She rooted it, last May;
It was only a slip; I pulled the rose,
And threw the stem away.

But she, sweet thrifty soul, bent down,
And planted it where she stood;
"Dear, maybe the flowers are living." she said,
"Asleep in this bit of wood."

I cannot rest, deary—cannot rest;
Let the old man have his will,
And wander from porch to garden post—
The house is so deathly still.

Wander, and long for a sight of the gate
She has left ajar for me—
We had got used to each other, dear,
So used to each other, you see.

Sixty years, and so wise and good,
She made me a better man,
From the moment I kissed her fair young face,
And our lovers' life began.

And seven fine boys she has given me,
And out of the seven, not one
But the noblest father in all the land
Would be proud to call his son.

Oh, well, dear Lord, I'll be patient,
But I feel so broken up;
At eighty years its an awesome thing
To drain such a bitter cup.

I know there's Joseph and John and Hal,
And four good men besides,
But a hundred sons couldn't be to me
Like the woman I made my bride.

My little Polly, so bright and fair!
So winsome and good and sweet!
She had roses twined in her sunny hair,
White shoes on her dainty feet.

And I held her hand—was it yesterday
That we stood up to be wed?
And—No, I remember, I'm eighty to-day,
And my dear wife, Polly, is dead.

AUNT SOPHRONIA TABER AT THE OPERA.

"So this is the uproar? Well, isn't this a master big building? And that chanticleer! It's got a thousand candles if it has one! It must have taken a sight of tallow to have run them all!"

"They are only make believe candles, aunt, with little jets of gas inside to give the effect of real candles."

"I want to know! Well, I only wish that your Uncle Peleg was here. You're sure, Louisa, that this is a perfectly proper and respectable place?"

"Why, aunt, you don't suppose that father would consent to our attending the opera if it were other than a perfectly proper place, do you?"

"No, no, dear. I suppose not. But somehow you city folks look upon such things differently from what we do who live in the country. Dear sus, Louisa! Do look way up there in the tip-top of the house. Did you ever see such a sight of people! Why, excursion trains must have run from all over the state. Massey, child! There's a woman forgotton her bunnit! Do just nudge her, Louisa and tell her of it. My Eliza Ann cut just such a caper as that one Sunday last summer. Got clean into the meeting-house and half way down the middle aisle before she discovered it, and the whul congregation a-giggling and a-tittering. Woodman Harrison shook the whul pew, and I don't know but what he'd a haw-hawed right out in meeting if his father hadn't a given him one of his looks. As 'twas I was afeared he'd bust a blood vessel.

"Just speak to that poor creetur, Louisa; she'll feel awfully cut up when she finds it out, but still, 'tis a Christian duty to tell her."

"Why, aunt, don't you know that she's in full dress, and left her bonnet at home intentionally? See how beautifully her hair is arranged. You don't suppose she wanted to cover up all that elegance, do you?"

"Came bare-headed a purpose! Well, I do declare! But, Louisa, where's the horsechestnut?"

"The horsechestnut, aunt?"

"Yes, child. You said something or other about a horsechestnut playing a voluntary, or something of that sort, before the uproar commenced."

"Oh, the orchestra! Yes, I remember. Don't you see those gentlemen in front of the stage?"

"Those men with the fiddles and the base viols?"

"Yes."

"Well, they compose the orchestra, and the orchestral part of this opera is particularly fine."

"I want to know! Belong to the first families, I suppose. They are an uncommon good-looking set of men. Is Mrs. Patti a furrener?"

"Yes; she's a mixture of Spanish and Italian. She was born in Madrid, but came to the United States when only five years of age, and remained here until she was nearly seventeen. She inherits her musical talents from both sides of the house. Her mother had quite a reputation in the dilettante world, under the name of Madame Barrilli, and Salvator Patti, her father, was a musician of considerable note. When Adelina was a mere mite of a thing, she was such a musical chatter-box that even her indulgent mother would sometimes chide her for her constant singing, but her only reply to these reprimands was as charming as it was naive:

"'What can I do, dear mamma? Whenever I open my mouth and try to talk, a little bird inside of me turns all my words to song, and so I have to sing.'"

"Well, I declare for't! It that ain't my Woodman Morrison all over again. He used to whistle from morning till night, till sometimes it seemed as if he would drive me crazy. Still, it sounded so light-hearted and cheery like, that I couldn't bear to scold him, though I often used to send him out of doors. I suppose that's just the way Addie's mother felt. Children average about the same the world over, whether furren or domestic, if they have any kind of inheritance."

"There, aunt, there's the bell, and the curtain will rise in a minute. Yes, see, there it goes."

"L-o-u-i-s-a!"

"Sh—listen; I want you to hear Signor Monti; he is considered a very fine bass."

"But, Louisia, oughtn't we to stand during prayer time?"

"You forget, aunt; this is only a play, not a truly temple."

"Dear suz! I only wish your Uncle Peleg was here. Somehow it seems kinder unchristian to be playacting worship."

"Why, aunt, there's no need of your feeling so conscious stricken, lots of church people come to the opera. It's more—more—er—well, I can't just express it, aunt; but anyway, people who discountenance the theatre, especially during Lent, approve the opera."

"That's what Parson Allen calls a distinction without a difference, I guess; a sort of wolf in sheep's clothing. But Louisa, what is the matter! La sakes, child, let's get out as spry as ever we can! The theatre's all on fire! Massy, Louisa, which is the way out? Oh, dear, dear, I wish that your Uncle Peleg——"

"Sh, aunt; do sit down. It isn't a fire, it's only the people clapping and applauding because Patti is on the stage. Don't you see her?"

"Sakes alive, is that it? I thought we were all afire, or Wiggin's flood had come. So that is Mrs. Patti? Well, I declare for't?" She's as spry as a cricket, and no mistake. Why, Louisa, how old is she? She looks scarcely out of her teens?"

"O, aunt, you musn't be so practical, and ask such personal questions. Ladies don't always want their ages known; but, sotto voce, she's over forty."

"Is it possible! Well, she's remarkably well preserved. There, they're at it again; what's the matter now?"

"Why, Scalchi has appeared; don't you see?"

"What, that dapper little fellow a bowing and a scraping and a smiling? Is he Mr. Scalchi?"

"That's Madame Scalchi, aunt, only she's taking the part of Arsaces, the commander of the Assyrian army, you know."

"Louisa," are you sure that this is a perfectly proper place? I only wish Peleg was here, for then perhaps I shouldn't feel so sort o' skeery like and guilty."

"O aunt, just listen! Isn't that exquisite?"

"Massy sus, Louisa, this beats the Haymakers that we had in Slowtown last winter, all out and out, and we thought they went a little ahead of anything on this continent. But what is all about? I can't understand any more of their lingo than if they were singing in Dutch."

"I'll read you the argument, aunt, and then perhaps you can follow them. They are singing in Italian."

"I want to know if that gibberish is Italian! Well, I only wish Peleg was here. He always had a kind of faculty for understanding anything furren. I heard him tell a French Canadian, who worked for us in haying last summer, that he might 'pitchee ong, and rakee after, or helpee the other mang pitchee off and stowee away! And a tickelder man than that Canuck you never seed! He yah-hawed, and held on to his sides like to split, till I was afeared he'd raise the whul neighborhood. Poor feller! I suppose it sounded kinder good to him to hear his lingo spoke, and so unexpected, too. He looked at your uncle in a queer sort of a way, and said, when he could speak for haw-hawing. 'Well, if it hain't no odds to you I guess I'll help the other man stow away.' To be sure Peleg's book larning haint overly much, but I believe he could travel from Dan to Beersheba and make himself understood."

"Now, aunt, we musn't speak another word till the opera is through, because we disturb other people."

"I suppose we do, but whenever anything happens you nudge me and I'll nudge you, or we can squeeze hands; that is the way Peleg and I do when we go to the lyceum. It's sort o' social, and everybody can hear just as well."

"Bel raggio lusing hier, Di speme, e di placer."

sang the glorious voice.

"Brava! Brava! Brava!" rang from all parts of the house.

"Hooray!"

"Why, Aunt Taber, sit down!"

"Ef Peleg were only here! Hip-hip"—

"Aunt, in pity's name keep still! Don't get so excited."

"Well, I never! The sweat's just a rolling off o' me and I'm as weak as a rag baby! I wish I had my turkey tail; that mite of a fan of yours don't give wind enough to cool a mouse."

"Now, aunt, do keep quiet. You'll hear better, and won't get so warm."

"Well, dear, I suppose you are right, but didn't that sound like an angel choir?"

"'Twas certainly very fine. One thing is sure, you've heard Patti at her best!"

"I'm so glad I cum! And if Peleg was only along—but there, I hain't going to speak again till the uproar is over."

And so the opera went on, Monti, Durat and Claudio holding a rich, firm background of deep tone to the brilliant, soul-entrancing vocalism of the soprano and contralto.

"Louisa Alden, what are them half nude statutes a standing up in back there? Don't they realize that the whul congregation can see them, and haven't they any modesty?"

"Why aunt, that's the ballet!"

"The bare what?"

"The ballet, aunt. Look, look, there they come. Isn't that the very poetry of mo"—

"Louisa Sophronia Taber Aden, just you pick up your regimentals and foller me, and that quick, too."

"But aunt"—

"You needn't 'but aunt' me. Just get your duds together and we'll travel. Thank goodness your uncle Peleg Josiah Taber is not here. Don't let me see you give as much as a glance to where them graceless nudities are pirouttin, or, big as you are, I'll box your ears."

"Why, aunt"—

"Louisa! I only wish I had my thickest veil, for I'm positively ashamed to be caught in this unchristian scrape. Come, and don't raise your eyes. There, thank goodness, we're in pure air at last!"

"Why, aunt, I thought you were enjoying the opera."

"The uproar, Louisa? I have nothing to say agin the uproar. Them voices would grace a celestial choir, this I say with all reverence, but that side show! I wouldn't have had my Eliza Ann nor my Woodman Harrison witnessed what we came near a witnessing, for a thousand-pound note, no, not for a ten thousand pound note! And I'm so thankful that your Uncle Peleg was not there! Somehow, Louisa, I feel, morally and metaphorically speaking, as if I'd fallen, like Lucifer, from morn till noon, from noon till dewy eve.—Christian Leader.

A FIRST-CLASS STRANGER.

Some shrewd man, when asked what he thought about the character of a neighbor, replied: "Mister, I don't know very much about him, but my impression is he would make a first-class stranger." There are a good many people in this world who might be ranked in the same class, persons whose friendship is worse than their enmity and whose acquaintance is to be deprecated and avoided. In making acquaintances we need to keep this fact constantly in mind. The scripture warns us that we are to "make no friendship with an angry man;" and many a poor fellow has involved himself in serious trouble by companionship with the rash and hot-headed. A dishonest man makes a much better stranger than acquaintance. A tattling mischief-maker, who insinuates himself into your confidence, worms out your secrets and then uses his power to dishonor and disgrace you may be recommended as a first-class stranger. The fast young man, who dresses gaily, lives high, drinks and gambles freely, may be very fascinating to the young of both sexes; but those who know him intimately, and those who have known others of his kind, are well aware that he makes a first-class stranger. There are persons who fear not God, who scoff at religion, who tell vile stories, who mock at godliness and despise reproof; all such persons are likely to make first-class strangers. Treat them courteously and kindly, but let them know that it is the kindness of a stranger and not of a boon companion or a bosom friend. "Evil communications corrupt good manners." A man is known by the company he keeps and the blessed man, who stands like the palm tree by the rivers of water, in perpetual strength, and joy, and freshness, and fruitfulness, is the man that "walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful, but his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." There is no folly like the folly of forgetting God, whose fear is the beginning of wisdom; and while fools make a mock of sin the wise man has declared "a company of fools shall be destroyed." Let young and old choose friends who will be profitable companions for time and eternity.—The Presbyterian.

GEN. SCOTT AND THE INDIAN PREACHER.

Gen. Scott used to tell a story about one of his Virginia connections, Gen. Charles Scott, who was made a prisoner of war at the surrender of Charleston in 1781, says Ben Perley Poore. His health was soon shattered and he got a parole and set out for Virginia with horses and a servant. On his way he lingered at a spring somewhat back from the road, and he was anxious to find out whether there were any Americans forces in the region, and ordered his servant to keep a lookout. After some time the servant remarked to the general that he saw a dirty looking Indian coming up the road. "Direct him to come here," said the general. He did so, and the following dialogue ensued:

General—"How do you do?"

Indian—"Oh, how do."

General—"Where are you going?"

Indian—"To the lower Catawba town."

General—"What are you going there for?"

Indian—"I am going to preach."

General—"Ah, so you preach, do you?"

Indian—"Oh, yes; me preach sometime."

General—"Well! do they pay you any for preaching?"

Indian—"Yes, little—20 shillings—each town pay me 20 shillings."

General—"Why, that is——poor pay."

Indian—"Yes, and —— poor preach, too."

The general burst into a fit of laughter, and when he became composed he discovered that he had got into a considerable perspiration, which he had not felt before since his sickness. The general and the Indian ate and drank together, and the general ate and drank with a better appetite than he had done since he had been a prisoner. He was helped into his easy chair again, pursued his journey, continued to improve in health, and when he arrived at Petersburg he was perfectly restored.

A Few Little Things.

A ripened apple fell one day
Where a wise man was walking—
An accident, some would say,
Not worth a moment's talking;
But in a philosophic way—
That apple called a mind in play
That was not easy balking—
The secret of mechanics lay
Enriched therein—'twas heaven's own ray—
To us in darkness walking;
Yet trifles such as these we say,
Scarce merit serious talking.

An idle boy sat down one night
Before a boiling kettle,
And plugged the spout exceeding tight
With some soft kind of metal;
Off went the lid!—a common sight—
But unto him 'twas different quite;
For he resolved to settle—
What force this boiling water might
Possess; and so there came to light
The steed of tireless mettle;
The locomotive lay that night
Within a small tea-kettle!

A Yankee youth, a sturdy chap,
Was partial to kite flying;
And just to see what chance would hap,
A fork he took, and tying
The prongs above the peak—the trap
Caught, caged and tamed the thunder-clap!
A fact now patent lying
In the electric wires which lap
Our country and will soon enwrap
All climes and oceans lying
Upon the broad earth's mighty map—
So much for his kite flying.

So don't despise the little things
Which happen daily 'round us,
For some of them may chance take wings,
To settle and astound us.
Trace back the greatest deed—it springs
From trifles which no poet sings—
Some trifling chance which found us
Prepared to grasp and mount its wings;
Then with our fame the wide world rings
And Fate's high hand hath crown'd us;
Because we watched those little things
Which chanced to happen 'round us.

LIKE IT WAS IN GERMAN.

Sometimes somepody comes to me und says vhas I Carl Dunder. I vhas. All right, Mr. Dunder, you vhas fat und sleek; you vhas always mit a schmile on your face; you half no trouble mit your family; eaferypody shpeaks well of you. I like you to tell me how it vhas done. Und I answer him:

"If somebody vhas content he gets fat. If somepody vhas at peace mit all der worldt he schmiles. Der man who marries for love und is a true husband to his wife and a good fadder to his shildren will haf no troubles mit his house. Eaferypody must shpeak well of a man who keeps out of politics, pays his debts, sthands to his word and preaks no laws."

Und sometimes somepody comes to me und says vhas I Carl Dunder, dot oldt Dutchmans? I vhas. Mr. Dunder I vhas your friendt. I like a little loan for aboudt two weeks. Und I says to him:

"Make oudt your note due in feefteen days und get some good indorsers und I lend you ten dollars. I like to keep you ash my friendt, und so I do peesness mit you in a peesness vhay. No stranger gets madt at you for an honest opinion, but sometimes your best frendt gets mad vhen you dun him. Der banker makes no enemies when he collects his money. Vhy should I?"

Und again somepody comes to me wit a long face und asks vhas I Carl Dunder, dot Dutchmans who make so mooch money! Mr. Dunder, you vhas sooch a lucky dog! You vhas shust coining money. You pegins so poor you doan' own your own boots, und now you ride in your carriage! Ah! Fortune vhas an eccentric jade! She schmiles on some und frowns on others. I like you to tell me how you manage it. Und I says to him:

What time you lose builds my fences und shingles my houses. Gif Perseverance a dollar und he makes it two; gif Half-Heart a dollar und he lets half of it slip away while he is waiting."

WHAT AN OLD MAN NOTICED.

I have noticed that all men are honest when well watched.

I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds.

I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature, it is necessary at times to be downright mad.

I have noticed that some men are so honest that necessity compels them to be dishonest in the end.

I have noticed that silks, broadcloths and jewels are often bought with other people's money.

I have noticed that whatever is is right, with a few exceptions—the left eye, the left leg and the left side of a plum pudding.

I have noticed that the prayer of a selfish man is, "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody that owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor, to surrender the rascal to justice.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition and the idol of all.

"I've got to get another girl," anounced the hotel clerk decidedly last evening. "She must be young, pretty, amiable and a good talker, and, above all, she must live in Buffalo. This interstate commerce bill is going to separate a good many loving couples. I can't afford to pay railroad fare and travel 200 miles to see my sweetheart any more. I make my last trip to-morrow."—Buffalo Courier.

"And why don't you believe I'm a pawnbroker, my boy?" asked a kindly old uncle. "Because," was Johnny's measured reply, "you ain't got the nose."—Judge.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, 1887.

CHICAGO elected a Republican mayor Tuesday by a handsome majority over the labor candidate, whose declaration for the red flag of the anarchists sealed his doom. That city has had all she wants of anarchy for some time.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN, the distinguished slugwump, called on the president Monday, felt his muscle, and pronounced him "fitter" than he expected. They discussed muscle and kindred topics, and both seemed equally pleased with the interview.

MICHIGAN voted on a prohibitory constitutional amendment Monday, but it appears to have been defeated by some 5000 votes, a heavy snowstorm keeping at home many of the country people who would have voted for the amendment.

THE interstate commerce commission has suspended for ninety days the long and short haul clause of the new law in its application to the Southern railroads and steamship lines, in order that the board may have time to give the matter a careful investigation.

UNCLE SAM'S family of pensioners is an expensive one, the payments on this account aggregating $61,133,195 for the first three months of this year, against $48,819,352 for the corresponding period of last year. Fortunately the U. S. purse is a deep one, and no one grudges the money paid to pensioners who are deserving and needy.

ROSCOE CONKLING is to emerge from his long political seclusion next week, when he will address the Republican club of Pittsburg, upon the occasion of its celebration of the birthday of Gen. Grant. Political gossips are alive with interest over the event, wondering if it foreshadows a return of the ex-senator to the political arena.

WESTERN railroads do not take kindly to the idea of abolishing commissions to outside ticket agents, and the roads in the East propose to force them to it by an extensive boycott, refusing all coupon tickets issued by them. This means no more through tickets until the difference is adjusted, and people going West can buy tickets and check baggage only to Chicago or St. Louis.

THE staid old town of Longmeadow has been startled the past week by the announcement that D. M. Pease, its tax collector for five years, was about $1000 short in his accounts. His bondsmen have made up the deficiency, and no prosecution is likely to follow. Pease has borne a good reputation, but is a poor man, with a large family, and apparently lacked sufficient mental acuteness to properly distinguish between meum et tuum.

MASSACHUSETTS railroads have decided to call in all interstate passes, and to issue no passes on account of the press, but will continue them to state officers, members of the Legislature, proprietors of summer hotels, managers of camp meetings, etc. But why not treat all alike, now that a new leaf is being turned over? It would be a good thing if our legislators had to pay their fare, for they would attend to their duties closer and the length of the sessions would be materially shortened, in all probability.

WHERE so strong a Republican state as Rhode Island elects a Democratic governor, as that state did on Wednesday, it is about time for party managers to put on their thinking caps, and seriously consider whether the "machine" has not outlived its usefulness. The result in this case is a straight victory for the reformers over bossism, and it is evident that there was occasion for an overturn when that staunch organ, the Providence Journal, bolted the ticket. The woman suffrage amendment to the constitution was overwhelmingly defeated.

THERE has been a growing tendency among some of the national banks to contest the payment of local taxes on the ground that they are taxed heavier than other moneyed capital, such as shares in life insurance and trust companies, and in savings banks, contrary to the spirit of the national banking law. Some of the lower courts have upheld this view, and others not, and in order to settle the matter thirty-five New York banks united in carying the matter to the supreme court of the United States, which decided on Monday that there is no unjust discrimination against the banks in that state—a decision which will add about $2,000,000 yearly to the revenue of New York city alone. It is an undoubted fact that the banks pay higher taxes than much other moneyed capital, simply because their capital cannot be covered up as the other is, but the exceptions do not amount to a discrimination, and the banks have been foolish to contest the matter.

THIS is a sorry story that comes from the Prescott almshouse—Mrs. Abby Lindsey, an insane pauper 48 years of age, left to watch beside a dying fellow-inmate, jumping from a window under the cover of night and making her escape in one of the worst snowstorms of the winter, only to die in the storm, her body not being found for four weeks, after the crows had pecked out her eyes and eaten the flesh from her face. The failure to institute a search for the body resulted in many ugly rumors as to the treatment of the town paupers, and led to an investigation by the state board of lunacy and charity. The fact is brought out that Mrs. Lindsey had been punished for running away by having a ball and chain fastened to her ankle, and there are indications of other abuses which are likely to have an airing now. The occasional bringing to light of cases of this kind suggests the question whether there are not other almshouses which need investigating. Abuses creep into these institutions easily, and they many times need a more careful supervision than they receive.

West Brookfield had a serious fire yesterday morning, which destroyed Blair's block, the principal business building of the town, involving a loss of about $40,000.

The mills and banks were closed all day, and the stores, telephone and post offices, etc., in the afternoon. Palmer seemed to be a congregating point for all the towns around, and large numbers of strangers were on the streets all day.

A correspondent of the Union, writing from Boston, tells about some of the talking members in the House, and remarks: "Lawyer Taft of Palmer is another effective speaker, and when he gets up and says, 'Mr. Speaker!' with that deep toned voice, all the whispering and bytalk is stopped, and listening is in order. He is a useful member, and when Hampden county is looking for senatorial timber, the star will hang over the town that is fenced off from the railroad station."

MONDAY'S TOWN MEETING.

The adjourned town meeting brought out an unusually large number of voters, the house being filled, seats all occupied and many being obliged to stand in the rear of the hall. As was expected, a great deal of interest was shown in the question of an appropriation "to suppress the illegal sale of liquor." A motion to appropriate $1000 was stoutly opposed by H. C. Strong on account of disbelief in the method and the burden of taxation; David Milliken and William Merriam spoke warmly in favor of it, and by a vote of the house Rev. F. W. Betts (who has not yet become a voter) was allowed a five minutes' speech on the question. The result of the vote was only decided by dividing the house, when it was shown that it was 2 to 1 in favor of the motion. The reports of the various town officers were accepted, although some items were questioned, but were satisfactorily explained. One of the auditors spoke of some of the methods employed by the selectmen and school committee in keeping their accounts, which ought to be remedied and undoubtedly will be. There were but two bidders for collecting the taxes. Geo. W. Ely bid $250, J. A. Palmer $225. Ely subsequently made a second bid at $215, and was elected tax collector, and was also elected constable so as to serve warrants without extra compensation. A discount of 6 per cent was voted on all taxes paid on or before September 1st. The treasurer was instructed to borrow in anticipation of taxes due. It was voted to continue to hire the rooms now occupied for a lock-up and tramp room. A new departure was made in the manner of caring for the highways and bridges, it being voted to leave them in the hands of a competent man, instead of having district surveyors as heretofore. The list of jurors was accepted as revised by the selectmen, and the town voted to accept and allow two townways, one at the depot village and one at Three Rivers, that had been laid out by the selectmen. The town voted to accept and adopt the provisions of the public statutes relating to the election of overseer of the poor, and they will constitute a separate board after the next annual meeting. At that time three members will be elected, one for one year, one for two years and one for three years, and one each year after that, so that two members of the board will have had experience and knowledge of the laws, so that the town will be able to save some of the money that has been lost in years gone by. The articles to see if the town would vote $3000 toward a better approach to the Boston & Albany railroad station, and to see if the town would vote to build a bridge over the railroad near John Feeney's house, and to see if the town would vote to accept the provisions relating to precinct voting, were indefinitely postponed. It seems as though it was a mistake to vote down the last article, as it only applied to state and national elections, and by its means a much larger vote would be called out. The French Catholic society at Three Rivers was voted permission to use a certain tract of land for burial purposes, provided no burial was made within 10 rods of the highway; $400 was asked for to be laid out in sidewalks in the various villages, but was defeated. Quite a debate occurred on the question of a soldiers' memorial, S. S. Taft speaking strongly in favor of an appropriation, and $5000 was voted to add to the sum already in the bank, and a committee was appointed to bring in plans and estimates to some other meeting, consisting of H. E. W. Clark, George Moores, George O. Henry, O. B. Smith and Frank Barker. $300 was voted the L. L. Merrick Grand Army post to enable them to aid soldiers and their families that are needy; $500 was voted the historical committee, and they were instructed to procure the services of a competent person to prepare a history of the town; $600 was voted to convey pupils to and from the public schools. This committee was appointed to look after the illegal sale of liquor: William Merriam, W. C. Greene, F. A. Bowen, G. F. Wright, F. H. Proctor. These officers were elected: Board of health, Drs. H. A. Smith, W. H. Stowe, H. M. Davis, J. J. Flynn, W. P. Felton; field drivers, John Keenan, E. E. Ryther, J. R. Wellman, G. A. Smith; surveyors of lumber and measurers of wood, C. L. Alexander, H. T. Bishop, F. L. Brooks, T. D. Potter, J. A. Palmer, N. Aiken: sealer of weights and measures, Albert T. Rodman; auditors, S. H. Hellyar and H. T. Bishop. Appropriations: Support of poor, $5000; contingencies, $2500; highways, $4000; culverts and sewers, $250; railings, $300; bridges, $1500, schools, $15,000; library, $600; Memorial day, $100. The town clerk was appointed to wait on the coal dealers in town and see that they had sworn weighers of coal.

GILBERTVILLE.

The Caledonian Dramatic club, which has advertised to play "Gilderoy" on April 11th, has secured the services of three or four of the best Warren singers to participate in their entertainment, which will greatly to its attraction.

The evening of April 6th was a night that will not be soon forgotten by the Caledonians af Warren and Gilbertville. They met for the first time in the Caledonian House, and enjoyed a superb supper provided by the landlord, James Stevenson. Chief McDuff of Warren occupied the chair. Grest justice was done to the land of mountain, wood and flood, her patriots, soldiers, lads and lasses.

There will be Easter services in the churches Sunday evening.

Miss Mary Davis of Monson spent Sunday with her parents here.

Mrs. C. O. Walker is spending the week in Bondsville and vicinity with friends.

The band made their first public appearance Monday night. They have improved wonderfully during the winter.

A gang of toughs, out of pure malicious mischief, went through the village Sunday night kicking at several doors and smashing in that of O. B. Smith. Bondsville life is too tame for them. What they need is a good course in the cooler.

The Sons of Temperance installed at their last meeting these officers: W. P., Richard Russell; W. A., Mrs. William Watson; R. S., F. N. Bragg: Asst. R. S., Mrs. Henry Morgan; F. S., Nellie G. Proctor; Treas., Charles F. Armstrong; Con., Paroy Ryther; I. S., Lillian Morgan; A. G., Seth Brown; P. W. P., Rev. J. W. Fulton.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

There will be special Easter services at Grace church Sunday morning, and an Easter concert by the Sunday school in the evening. A committee has been appointed to collect flowers.

The Christian Endeavor Society had a quarterly business meeting, followed by a sociable, Tuesday evening. A resolution was adopted favoring the accumulation of a fund sufficient to defray the expenses of delegates to the national convention at Saratoga in July.

A year ago each end of the town put up a ticket of its own, and the north end ticket had about three majority, so that the question of which end should kick the beam was not considered settled. This year the north end ticket had forty majority, and some things seem drawing toward a settlement. It was voted to resist the claim of C. E. Peck against the town. He claims about $1600 for money expended on the Memorial Hall building, and about half of this is said to have been spent after the town meeting a year ago, when the town refused to go on with the work and discharged the building committee. The selectmen would favor the settlement of the claim for money expended before that meeting, but not for any spent since.

Steele, Prof. B. Gill, R. R. Wright, H. H. Burbank, Alvin Chilson, Dr. J. M. Foster, John M. Merrick, Prof. C. D. Woods, S. J. Goodenough.

HAMPDEN.

There is to be a social party and dance at Orrin C. McCray's Friday evening.

Teams loaded with household goods are a common sight, wending their way through the mud toward the lower end of the village, and denote renewed business activity.

Senator William R. Sessions of Hampden spoke before the Farmers' Club at Ware Center at their last meeting on the subject of "Dairying," which was said to be very interesting and instructive.

Not a thousand miles from here a professional man addressing the school children very properly counseled them to cultivate politeness at home, adding that he was never more shocked than to see a young lady visitor eating with her knife. His wife colored, while other spectators smiled, as it is not considered very polite for a man to stand with his hands jammed in his pockets when making an address.

Hampden town meeting was faithfully observed Monday, and the Republican ticket was carried entire. Two of the selectmen are new to the business, one a new resident, and it remains to be seen whether his selection was a judicious one; but ex-Senator Sessions is a veteran leader, and may be safely trusted to keep the untrained team from the sloughs in which they would be liable to plunge. Miss Elsie M. Sessions was elected school committee for three years, receiving over two-thirds of the votes cast. The town voted no license. Two women voted, although an out-going selectman informed them that they could not, thereby exposing his own negligence in the matter of registration, as they have been registered for years. These officers were elected: Clerk and treasurer, Sumner Smith; selectmen and overseers of the poor, William Leach, Erwin H. Temple and William R. Sessions; assessor, Alpheus Peck for three years; school committee, Elsie M. Sessions for three years; constables, David J. Twohig, John F. Whitaker and John R. Sheldon. Appropriations: Schools, $1300; school houses, $100; text books, $100; paupers, $700; highways, $700; prosecuting violations of liquor law, $200; contingent account, $600; total, $3700. Liquor license: Yes, 65; no, 87.

LUDLOW.

The First Congregational church last week forwarded the following letter to Dea. E. T. Parsons of Washington, D. C., formerly of this town, it being a memorial of his 82d birthday, which occurred Friday, April 1st:

Dear Brother:—The Congregational church wish to send hearty greetings to her eldest deacon in commemoration of his 82d birthday. The universal sentiment of all created beings recognizes life to be a blessed gift of God, to be received with thanksgiving; in accord with this spirit, we wish to join with you in praise to the living Father that He has been pleased to spare your life to a good age, and we do pray that your remaining days upon the earth may be blessed of God to the health and increasing confidence of your soul in His precious promise. We do most affectionately express to you our continual appreciation of the godly life and faithful service which for so many years you rendered unto this people. It is more than 57 years, according to the record, since you came from a sister church to enroll your name with the people of God here, and it is 38 years last December since you were ordained to serve as a deacon. It is our grateful testimony, that we believe in all these years your heart has never turned away from our God, and your prayers have never ceased for his people in this church and community. We do not forget that in times of trial and calamity your voice and counsel the assistance of heart and hand, of prayers and purse, have not failed; in times of national conflict you have sought to serve with God's people and the cause of the oppressed; loyal to man and loyal to God. In the church at times when religion suffered depression, and the multitude seemed to languish, you have been with the faithful few to hold up the Christian banner; and in seasons of precious revival, in public prayer and exhortation, and in private personal conversation, you have besought many souls to come to Christ. Some of these have passed on before, while others still remain to cherish special feelings of affection for you because of the warm grasp of the hand and earnest words that helped them in the decisive moment to choose the good path. In our homes also, in many times of trouble, sickness and death your words of sympathy and prayers are remembered as gracious benedictions. For these and the manifold services which as a Christian man and an honored officer in this church you have so cheerfully rendered, this church and people send their grateful appreciation. Accept we entreat you our grateful remembrances of the past and our continued deep interest in your well being. In behalf of the church, M. P. DICKEY, Pastor.

The young men's social club at their meeting Tuesday evening elected the following officers: President, C. F. Jordan; vice president, W. J. Randall; secretary, W. A. Squier; treasurer, S. Fred Cushman; directors, C. W. King and M. R. Lull.

The glass ball shoot Fast Day was well attended, 17 men coming to the scratch. The highest scores were made by L. C. Flynt, H. C. Norcross, W. C. Crocker, Wm. Peck and F. D. Beach. Several challenges have been issued and accepted, and some interesting matches will come off before long.

Mr. Fraser of the Universalist church close their labors May 1st, and Father Lee of the Catholic church takes a journey to Europe. Rev. Alex Dight will turn over the pastorate of the M. E. church to a successor at the coming conference.

The time-honored custom of house-moving on the first of April seems to have been revived this year, quite a number of families having changed localities. The first of May will also show some changes, but house-moving in the village is nothing compared to the annual break-up 30 years ago, when two-thirds of the villagers who rented changed habitations.

T. L. McDonald, a Monson boy, has recently been elected president of the Hahnemannian Institute of Philadelphia. He has also been honored by an appointment to the assistantship of B. Frank Betts, M. D., professor of gynæcology and pœdology in Hahnaman college of Philadelphia. The duties of such assistantship is to aid in the various surgical operations and to take the professor's practice during his summer vacation, and in his various absences from the city.

Cushman; selectmen, A. D. Norcross, C. L. Peck and John Leahy; overseers of the poor, Horace Squier, C. L. Peck and George H. Fosket; assessors, Omar Pease, George H. Fosket and Joseph M. Liquor license: Yes, 246; no, 284. The meeting was adjourned to April 18th, at 2 o'clock p. m., when lively times are expected.

A CARD.—We take this method of extending our sincere, heartfelt and grateful thanks to all our friends and neighbors for their kindness and assistance in our late sad bereavement, whereby our home has been deprived of the presence of a fond and loving wife and mother. We especially desire to thank those who assisted by singing at the last sad service, and also for contributions of floral offerings, for she whom we have laid away in the silent tomb loved melody and flowers. May He who even notes the fall of one sparrow reward them an hundred fold, is the sincere wish of

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

From our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, April 6th, 1887.

On Thursday in the House an attempt was made to reconsider the engrossment of the Sunday bill, and of the bill to allow women to vote on the issue of liquor licenses. Mr. Walker of Worcester led the movement for the former and pleaded for a Sunday of rest for all employes. He was opposed to keeping open barbers' shops, and urged cordial relations between employer and employes. But the House was against him, 76 to 108.

The second movement was led by Mr. O'Connor of Worcester. He was supported by a few speakers and met able opposition, especially from Mr. Quincy of Quincy, and Mr. Darling of Somerville. Again the House stoutly stood by its record, and the vote was 70 yeas to 98 nays, with 18 pairs.

The Senate, which rejected Mr. Howe's guide-post bill on Wednesday, reconsidered its action on Thursday on motion of Mr. Forbes of Worcester, and ordered the bill to a third reading. Members find that there is merit in the bill, though they have had lots of fun from it.

In consequence of a recent horrible murder in a Boston gambling den, the House has admitted an order looking to increased powers for the police over such fortresses of crime.

No session of the Senate was held on Friday, because the members wished to go to Beverly and get some visible information on the need for the incorporation of the town of Beverly Farms, the bill for which passed the House by a very large majority.

One of the signs of the last part of the session was observable in the House Friday when the committee on expediting business reported that morning sessions should begin on Tuesday, April 19. That is eight days earlier than on last year.

When the House took up the bill on Friday to make the first Monday in September

"Labor's holiday," just as far as the Fourth of July is now a legal holiday, not a word of debate occurred, but the bill was voted down by 52 to 55. A roll call was then ordered and the bill was ordered to a third reading by 80 to 51. Sometimes there is nothing like a roll call to make men change their minds.

A vote of 83 to 30 was given the same afternoon by the House on the bill to secure uniform and proper meal hours for young persons, children and women in factories and work shops. Some of the members opposed the bill, but the argument which carried it was that it was necessary for the health of a much-overworked and over-confined class of laboring people.

Only the Senate was in session on Monday, for the House was away at town meeting, and no business of interest to the state as a whole was transacted. But on Tuesday the Senate held the longest sitting of the year, for all the afternoon was consumed on the bill to divide Beverly, and then there was no vote. It is a bitter fight and involves charges of dishonesty against the divisionists, but hardly specific enough to be more than "resented with indignation" or "thrown back with scorn," or something of that nature.

One of the bills reported in the Senate on Tuesday provides that all state, city and town employes in the state shall be required to give only eight hours for a day's work, or if there is any change for accommodation, the total shall not be over 48 hours a week.

An incident in the House Tuesday was the report of the judiciary committee, by Mr. Kent of Worcester, on the order of Mr. Graves of Groton, practically charging Treasurer Beard and Adin Thayer with lobbying for the reëlection of Senator Dawes. The committee assumed that the order was adopted by the House inadvertently and asked to be discharged from considering it. This was done and then, on Mr. Kent's motion, the order was indefinitely postponed. Not a word of debate was offered, either by Mr. Graves or any one else. But Mr. Beard now gives out for publication a letter which he wrote to Mr. Kent March 7, saying he feels entitled "to demand from your committee a public investigation, which shall give me an opportunity to meet my accuser or accusers, if any appear, face to face, and which shall show of anything in my official or private conduct justified such imputation." The assumption of the committee, and the indorsement of that assumption by the House, that the House adopted the order inadvertently, takes the grievance from Mr. Beard, and this doubtless ends the matter.

The "Labor holiday" bill was on its engrossing stage in the House Tuesday, and the vote on it was 102 yeas to 57 nays. It must now go to the Senate.

Mr. Milliken of Malden renewed his attempt to substitute a bill to secure the privacy of the execution of condemned criminals, but the argument of Mr. Taft of Palmer and others was that the bill allowed the prisoner to have hardened desperadoes at the scene who might be able to overpower those who were present officially; so that the bill was rejected and the law left as it is.

The House has engrossed the bill to limit liquor licenses to one in 500 people, having amended it to allow towns of less than 500 which vote for license to have one license, and to provide that each license must be voted on separately in other places.

A large vote was given in the House for the bill to prevent the adulteration of maple sugar and syrup and bees' honey.

The last of the Beverly fight was reached in the Senate on Wednesday. A great crowd was present and the bill was finally ordered to a third reading by 19 to 11. Charges that dishonest means had been used to pass the bill were made by Senator Slattery of Middlesex, but he gave no particulars and offered no proofs, so they really amounted to nothing.

The House passed to be engrossed the bill for uniform meal hours in factories, after amending it to favor the employers more than the original bill did. The vote was 72 to 46.

A unanimous vote was given by the House for the employer's liability bill, after amending it so that no damages can be recovered by an employe who is not exercising due care and diligence, or who violates the rules which have been made by the employer for the safety of the employes.

By a large vote the House rejected the bill to prohibit the exercise of liquor licenses within half a mile of the boundaries of cities or towns which vote no license. It was found that in some cases such a law would nullify a town's vote for license.

The House has admitted an order for a codification of all the militia laws.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from proprietary medicines, no doubt has largely benefitted the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers. Especially is this the case with Green's August Flower and Boschee's German Syrup, as the reduction of thirty-six cents per dozen has been added to increase the size of the bottles containing these remedies, thereby giving one-fifth more medicine in the 75 cent size. The August Flower for dyspepsia and liver complaint, and the German syrup for cough and lung troubles, have perhaps, the largest sale of any medicines in the world. The advantage of increased size of the bottles will be greatly appreciated by the sick and afflicted in every town and village in civilized countries. Sample bottles for 10 cents remain the same size. 47eow

FIVE PER CENT

REGISTERED AND COUPON WATER WORKS TRUST BONDS

OF THE

NATIONAL WATER WORKS INVESTMENT COMPANY,

NEW YORK.

Capital, $500,000.

Secured by the pledge of Six Per Cent Water Bonds deposited with the Farmer's Loan & Trust Co.

DIRECTORS.

George F. Baker, President First National bank, New York.
C. C. Pomeroy, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.
E. W. Clark, of Messrs. E. W. Clark & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
H. C. Fahnestock, Vice-President First National bank, New York.
F. M. Colston, of Messrs. Wilson, Colston & Co., Baltimore, Md.
Theodore C. Woodbury, of Messrs. Woodbury & Moulton, Portland, Me.
Archer N. Martin, of Messrs. Post, Martin & Co., New York.

These bonds, the direct obligation of the National Water Works Investment Company, have the following advantages to investors:

First—As security, a direct charge against the capital of The National Water Works Investment company, amounting to $500,000.

Second—The benefit of the trained talent, experience and judgment of the experts employed by The National Water Works Investment company and the business judgment of its Directors.

Third—Constantly-increasing security. The municipalities, either directly or otherwise, make such contracts with the water-works companies as to give them practically the exclusive right to supply water. Every increase in the population increases the demand for water, and the consequent revenue of the company; as the city grows, therefore, the revenue of the water company and the security of these bonds correspondingly increase.

Fourth—The company sees that, as greater security to the bonds which it purchases, assignments are made by the local water company directly to a trust company of the revenue delivered from the city for fire protection, etc., for the benefit of the bondholders, so that the investor will have the further security of the municipal obligations in addition to that of the local company and that of The National Water Works Investment company.

These bonds will, therefore, combine the advantages of Municipal Obligation. Direct Obligation of The Local Water Works company and the Absolute Obligation of The National Water Works Investment company.

It is believed that these securities are an absolutely safe investment, based on an element vital to the existence of every community, secured by most stringent provisions for the protection of the investor, and having the additional advantages of ready convertibility.

These bonds are for sale in denominations of $1000, $500 and $100, by

SOLUBLE PACIFIC GUANO.

FOR SALE BY AGENTS IN EVERY TOWN.

Since 1865 this Fertilizer has proved like Farm-yard manure, good for any crop, on any soil, in any climate.

Try it alongside of brands which advertise attractive "valuations," and see if the latter even equal it in their effect on the soil. Any farmer may thus learn to his own satisfaction the doubtful value of "commercial valuations," as against the agricultural value of a good Fertilizer.
